LA SALLE

SHOULDER TO SHOULDER
Securing the Future

BILL SAUTTER, '71: WHY I GIVE BACK

Bill Sautter, '71, is a member of La Salle's Board of Trustees and recipient of La Salle University's Leadership Award at the 2002 Charter Dinner. Sautter is President and C.E.O. of Elliott-Lewis Corporation, a 100-year-old heating, ventilating, air conditioning (HVAC), and building services management company with offices located in Northeast Philadelphia, New Jersey, and Florida. He and his wife, Claire, have made a gift of $100,000 to Shoulder to Shoulder: Securing the Future, La Salle's $25 million major gift initiative to strengthen the University endowment and fund construction of a new science and technology center.

IT WASN'T VERY LIKELY THAT I WOULD LEAP FROM A neighborhood in Mayfair to become the President and Chief Executive of a national corporation. But that was before I went to La Salle University. La Salle became my road map for the future. Along with my parents, it gave me direction. It not only showed me the way, but it also provided the vehicle that got me there. La Salle was transformational: It focused me for the first time on what I needed to do with my life. La Salle taught me the value of hard work and self-discipline. It encouraged me to develop career direction and helped me acquire a work ethic that has guided me throughout my life. In short, La Salle instilled in me the knowledge and desire to succeed, not only in business but also in life.

There is a lot of talk about education today—the money that is needed, the laws that have to be passed, the tests that have to be taken. But what I learned at La Salle is the most important thing of all—the relationship of teachers dedicated to teaching and students eager to learn. Three of those teachers especially remain in my memory: Mike DeAngelis, Joe Markmann, and Walt Kaiser. They were not only great teachers, but also practical guides. They knew as much about helping you find a job as they did about what was in the textbooks. And when I graduated, I knew I was prepared to make my way in the world.

Thanks to the Christian Brothers, there is a place like La Salle, a place that values and remains committed to providing a Catholic education to students regardless of their economic circumstances. Maintaining this tradition of transformation at our alma mater is no small challenge and requires the involvement and support of all alumni. That is why I am involved with La Salle today.

I believe that Shoulder to Shoulder, with its $25 million goal, is a critical fundraising initiative for La Salle because strengthening the endowment and building a new science and technology center will allow the University to maintain its educational excellence and compete successfully in a very competitive marketplace. My wife, Claire, and I have committed financially to Shoulder to Shoulder: Securing the Future because the culture and values nurtured by La Salle emphasize staying involved and giving back to the community. Participating in Shoulder to Shoulder is one way for me to fulfill this obligation.

Like me, good friends and fellow board members such as Jim Lynch, Bill Sasso, Nick Giordano, and many, many others were lucky to have La Salle. We were blessed by the education we received there. We don't forget. We will never forget. We know we have a responsibility to keep it going. We want this generation and future generations to have the opportunities we had. We want to give something back to a school that gave so much to us. That is what leadership is all about.

I hope you will stand with me, the Christian Brothers, and many alumni in securing the future for La Salle and the students we serve.

Such innovative programs as Integrated Science, Business, and Technology (ISBT), Digital Arts and Multimedia Design (DART), the E-Commerce Institute, and majors in information technology are helping drive enrollment increases. Along with the traditional sciences, business, and nursing, these new programs will flourish in the new facility.

PRESIDENT'S REPORT

2004-2005

Dear Alumni/ae and Friends of La Salle:

On behalf of our students and the rest of the La Salle University community, I offer my heartfelt gratitude to our many loyal benefactors. While this report recognizes the generosity of thousands of our donors, we are also deeply thankful for the gifts of time and talent from our alumni and other volunteers—beginning with our dedicated Board of Trustees.

The past year, I believe, will be viewed by history as a landmark as the University builds towards the future. The University established its first College. Befitting the Christian Brothers' tradition and La Salle's own history, the College of Professional and Continuing Studies will expand opportunities for adult learners, especially for those whose family and/or career responsibilities do not allow them to be full-time students.

More alumni made gifts to the University this past year than in the previous year and contributed more money. In fact, total giving by alumni and friends increased by 13 percent as compared to the 2003-04 fiscal year. The Shoulder to Shoulder fundraising initiative for building a new science and technology center and increasing our endowment continues to garner support, having secured gifts and pledges representing 62 percent of the goal.

The new 428-student residence, St. Basil Court, and adjacent dining facility, Treetops Café, overlooking Fairmount Park, opened for the fall semester. Further, the expansion of La Salle's Bucks County Center in Newtown has begun. When completed next year, the Center's capacity will have doubled, helping to meet the growing interest in the region for a La Salle education.

On Main Campus, the section of 20th Street that runs through campus has been made one-way permanently, increasing safety not only for the La Salle community but also for our neighbors. Cheered by that news, an alumnus from the Class of 1949 made a generous donation to be used to enhance the appearance of the newly configured street.

This year also marks the 50th anniversary of La Salle's School of Business, which will be celebrated by events this academic year. Most appropriately, the School recently earned a six-year reaccreditation from the prestigious Association to Advance Collegiate Schools of Business (AACSB International), providing us with yet another reason to celebrate. Also, the Council on Social Work Education reaccredited our Social Work Program through 2013.

La Salle University President Brother Michael J. McGinniss (left), F.S.C., Ph.D., '70, bestows a master's degree in Bilingual/Bicultural Studies to La Salle Economics Professor Mark Ratkus, Ph.D., '69, '05, at the University's May Commencement. (See related story in News section.)

One aspect of our identity at La Salle is our belief that education should be useful—for personal growth, professional advancement, and service to others. As I reflect on this past year, I am struck by the number of our alumni whose “service to others” has been to, and through, the University. The increased interest and engagement of our alumni has been a blessing.

In closing, I encourage you to read in more detail the highlights of the past year, which have been organized according to the major themes of the University's Strategic Plan. I thank you again for your past support and ask for your continuing involvement as we keep the positive momentum going at La Salle.

Sincerely yours,

Brother Michael

Michael J. McGinniss, F.S.C., '70
President

ENHANCING OUR INTELLECTUAL AND SPIRITUAL LIFE

One measure of a University's commitment to enhancing its intellectual and spiritual life is constant assessment and willingness to change. Accordingly, La Salle has embraced with vigor its self-study for reaffirmation of accreditation by the Middle States Association. For nearly two years, the University has dedicated itself to examining every aspect of its functioning, organized by 14 standards that comprise characteristics of excellence in higher education. The task directly involves 113 faculty, administrators, staff, and students and engages the entire University community through interviews, focus groups, questionnaires, and opportunities for feedback. This important work will continue through the 2005-2006 academic year.

Also on the accreditation front, the Association to Advance Collegiate Schools of Business (AACSB International) has extended accreditation for La Salle's School of Business for the next six years. This prestigious accreditation, which the School of Business first earned in 1995, is awarded to only 20 percent of business programs worldwide. Fittingly, the reaccreditation comes at a special time—the 50th anniversary of the School of Business.

In addition, the Council on Social Work Education (CSWE), the national accrediting body for schools of social work, reaccredited La Salle's Social Work Program through 2013. Meeting the standards set forth by CSWE means that the Social Work Program curriculum is current and substantive. A degree from an accredited social work program can provide graduates the privileges of advanced standing to graduate schools of social work, social work licensure in many states, and increased career opportunities within the profession.

While the process of accreditation serves as one occasion for assessment and change, it is not the only one. This past year, for example, our Digital Arts and Multimedia Design program revised its curriculum substantially based on feedback from the corporate community. The University is fortunate to have active Advisory Boards—leaders in their respective fields, including many alumni—for our academic programs to participate in ongoing evaluation processes. Further, La Salle develops new programs to meet society's needs. The University's highly respected Education Department, for example, initiated a graduate-level program to provide certification for teachers as reading specialists. This is designed to develop the professional literacy leaders that schools throughout the country are demanding.

In the past year, La Salle took a major step in enhancing opportunities for adult learners by establishing our first College, the College of Professional and Continuing Studies. The College is designed primarily for part-time students whose family and/or career responsibilities do not allow them to be full-time students. La Salle has a long history of meeting the needs of adult students, as many of our post-World War II senior alumni may recall. That need exists today, and the University is committed to stepping up to meet it.

The University took additional steps to actualize one of our core values—a deep respect for each individual. That means providing each student with the maximum possible individual support toward personal, intellectual, and spiritual growth. The early-alert freshman advising system now has more than 90 faculty and staff serving as advisers. The services of La Salle's Writing Center were expanded, and the Peer Tutoring system was strengthened.

This kind of personal approach to students has long been a characteristic of La Salle faculty—and it flourishes. Through challenging small classes where dynamic discussion takes place, the La Salle faculty ensures all motivated students succeed in an environment of mutual respect. Faculty members serve as role models of scholarship and research, with faculty-student collaboration commonplace in many programs.

The University continues to cultivate Catholic and Lasallian values in our curriculum, programs, and institutional culture. For example, the orientation program for all new employees was modified to include the implications of Catholic and Lasallian values for their work. In addition, the Teaching and Learning Center not only sponsored a Charter Week program on this topic, but it also revised the orientation program designed specifically for new faculty as a way of strengthening the curricular and programmatic expression of our Catholic and Lasallian identity. Further, the La Salle faculty and administrators who are participating in the Lasallian Leadership Institute, a three-year national leadership program of the Christian Brothers, are involved in programming on campus to integrate these values.

COMMUNICATING OUR DISTINCT IDENTITY

Based on solid market research that included La Salle students, faculty, administrators, and alumni, along with the work of the University's Marketing Task Force, the University was able to capture La Salle's distinct identity:

La Salle University is a dynamic educational community shaped by traditional Catholic and Lasallian values: a deep respect for each individual, a belief that intellectual and spiritual development go hand in hand, a passion for creative teaching and learning, and a conviction that education should be useful—for personal growth, professional advancement, and service to others. The University's environment fosters students' involvement in their own education, both inside and outside the classroom; supports and challenges them; engages and empowers them, all with the goal of providing a transforming experience, one that will ensure their lifelong association with La Salle.

In support of the newly defined identity, the University launched a complementary graphic identity program in 2004. The direction of the graphic identity emerged from the market research's conclusion that La Salle's emphasis on values and ethics is a major factor in the institution's distinctiveness, as is the Christian Brothers' approach to education through their founder, Saint John Baptist de La Salle.

Last year, the University continued to apply all components of its new graphic identity—the University logo, coat of arms, and athletics logo, along with guidelines for proper usage. The logos—which earned national recognition for design—can be seen on all new publications, advertising, banners, apparel, and many campus store items. In addition, almost all University vehicles now carry the updated logo. Newsletters for the University's three schools—Arts and Sciences, Business, and Nursing—have been redesigned to be consistent with La Salle's new look.

Even as the University works to ensure the consistency of its communications through messages and graphics, the people of La Salle realize that our true identity is defined and tested every day in the way we represent our institution.

INVESTING IN OUR FUTURE

The University remains committed to making the personal, communal, and financial investments needed to ensure La Salle's future success. The recent opening of St. Basil Court, our new $26 million student residence, and Treetops Café, its adjacent dining facility, is representative of the University's commitment to the future. The next sign of growth is the expansion of La Salle's Bucks County Center in Newtown, Pa., where the construction of a 22,000-square-foot addition has begun. Both projects are funded by the successful issuance and sale of bonds based on La Salle's financial stability.

Our Shoulder to Shoulder: Securing the Future initiative for building a new science and technology center and increasing our endowment, which was launched last year, continues to garner support. To date, we have secured gifts and pledges in the amount of $15.4 million, representing 62 percent of our $25 million goal. This initiative is evidence of our alumni's willingness to invest in La Salle's future.

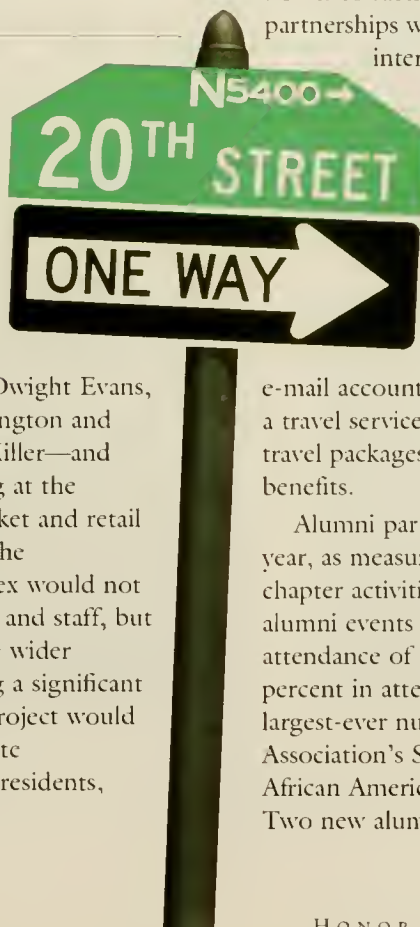

Overall financial support for La Salle continues to grow. Total giving for the year approached $10.7 million, a nearly 16 percent increase from the 2003-04 fiscal year. The Annual Fund experienced a 2.3 percent increase in the number of donors, which builds on a 9 percent rise the previous year.

La Salle continued to lead a partnership of 12 other colleges and universities and more than 40 school districts and administer a $12.5 million National Science Foundation grant designed to improve mathematics and science education in the region, furthering the University's reputation in this important field.

Investments in facilities and technology required to deliver a high-quality education continue to be a priority at La Salle. Building on the creation of a portal within the University's Web site, internal communications have expanded dramatically for students, faculty, administrators, and alumni. Of particular note is the evolution and use of WebCT, a course-management system. Wireless Internet access is a reality, as is video conferencing between the Main Campus and La Salle's Bucks County Center.

ENHANCING THE QUALITY OF LIFE IN OUR COMMUNITY

Constantly looking to impact our community in positive ways, La Salle has been working with the public sector, elected local leaders, and civic associations to explore new ways to make the community a better place. This past year, with the encouragement of and consultation with elected leaders—Pennsylvania State Representatives Dwight Evans, '75, John Myers, and Leanna Washington and City Councilwoman Donna Reed Miller—and others, the University began looking at the possibility of developing a supermarket and retail complex on the northwest edge of the University's property. Such a complex would not only serve La Salle students, faculty, and staff, but also our neighbors and others in the wider community. Aside from representing a significant investment in the community, the project would add retail amenities to the area, create employment opportunities for local residents, and spur additional investment.

In a related development, the University, in partnership with the Fairmount Park Commission, is working to turn an underutilized parcel of parkland adjoining our South Campus into a dramatically improved venue for athletic and recreational use for La Salle students and community residents.

After the Philadelphia City Council voted to make permanent the one-way configuration of 20th Street from Belfield Avenue to Olney Avenue, the University worked closely with the city's Streets Department to make this a safe and attractive corridor. On hearing of this development, alumnus John McHale, class of '49, made a generous donation for landscaping and related enhancements to the newly configured street.

The University continued its work with our District's City Councilwoman, Donna Reed Miller, and her community outreach staff to organize neighborhood block captains to share common concerns for private residence zoning issues, safety, and neighborhood beautification.

PARTNERING WITH OUR ALUMNI

The University continues to make great strides in its efforts to further develop mutually beneficial partnerships with alumni. Responding to alumni interest, professional networking has been enhanced by the addition of a Career Networking Directory in the "mylasalle" alumni portal of the University's Web site. Further, the Alumni Relations office established a full-time position dedicated to supporting this initiative. Alumni Relations also developed a service that allows alumni to have a La Salle-based e-mail account for life. In addition, a partnership with a travel service, which provides alumni with discounted travel packages, has been added to the menu of alumni benefits.

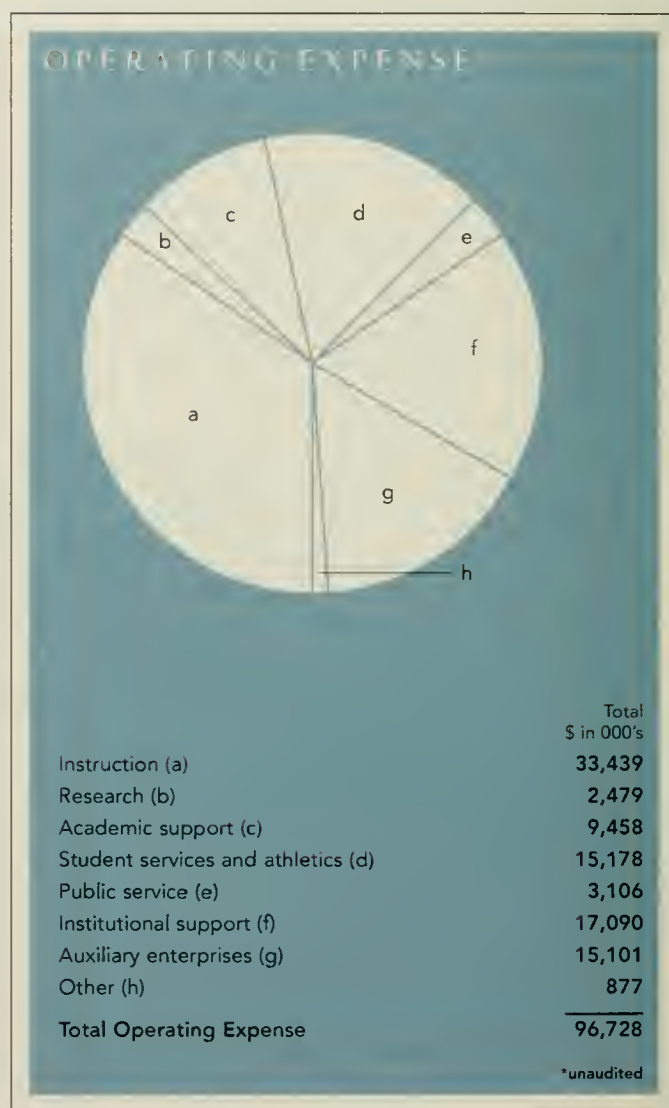

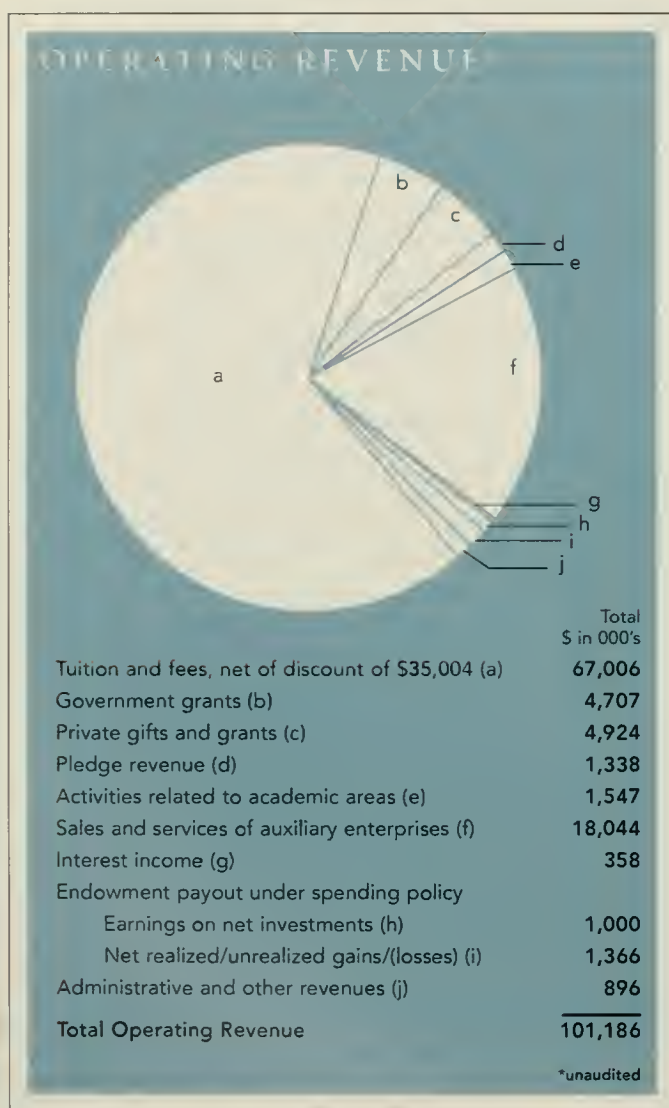

Alumni participation jumped significantly again this year, as measured by attendance at events and club and chapter activities, as well as volunteerism. Some 60 alumni events included Homecoming Weekend with an attendance of 850 people, a Reunion Weekend up 43 percent in attendance from the previous year, and the largest-ever number of attendees at the Alumni Association's Signum Fidei Award dinner and the African American Alumni Association annual dinner. Two new alumni clubs, Carolina and Baltimore, were established this year, with the Baltimore Club becoming independent from the Washington, D.C., Chapter. Eighteen alumni events were held in a dozen cities this past year.

The University also hosted its first Alumni Volunteer Leadership Conference, a successful program that will be repeated in the coming year. Alumni volunteers, led by the Alumni Association Board of Directors, continued to develop relations with current students and to assist in recruiting prospective students. Additionally, more alumni have chosen to communicate with La Salle electronically. A 30 percent increase this year has brought the alumni e-mail database to nearly 14,000 addresses.

A FINAL THOUGHT

In a year filled with achievements and highlights, La Salle's awarding of an honorary degree to one of our alumni stands out for its symbolism and poignancy. Karen Renée Pushaw, '78, left a successful career as an attorney to serve the poor in one of Philadelphia's neediest neighborhoods. She said of her life's work: "I realized this is what I was supposed to be doing." Her moving remarks at the Commencement ceremony in May painted a picture of Lasallian values in action—a true role model and inspiration.

Note: As of the publication date, the FY 2005 audit was not yet completed. Therefore, the FY 2005 numbers shown above are the unaudited numbers. Upon completion of the audit, copies of the University's audited financial statements will be made available upon written request to: Vice President for Business Affairs, La Salle University, 1900 West Olney Avenue, Philadelphia, PA 19141-1199.

HONOR ROLL 2004 - 2005

Gifts and grants reported in this section of the President's Report reflect donations received by the University with postmark dates between June 1, 2004, and May 31, 2005. (If your gift was postmarked in June 2005, please be assured that your gift will be listed in the 2006 President's Report.)

Gifts during Fiscal Year '05 may include any of the following: gifts of cash; gifts of stock; matching gifts; grants; bequests; planned gifts; gifts-in-kind; real estate; and gifts of paid-up life insurance.

Every effort has been made to ensure the accuracy of the donor list. If a name has been misspelled or omitted, or if a gift has been reported incorrectly, we appreciate your assistance in reporting it to the University Advancement office at 215.951.1540.

The seventh annual President's Cup was played at the Blue Bell Country Club on April 25 with a sold-out group of devoted fans of golf and La Salle University. More than 250 alumni, parents, corporate partners, and friends helped the University raise almost $210,000. All proceeds benefit scholarship and financial aid resources for students at the University. Pictured above, Brother Michael McGinniss, F.S.C., Ph.D., '70, La Salle President, poses with three members of the winning foursome at the President's Cup Golf Tournament. (From left) William L. Stulginsky, '73, Br. Michael, Thomas A. Leonard, '70, and Ted Kochanski, '70. Not pictured is Jeffrey R. Boyle, '88.

In the midst of this year's Reunion activities, graduates from the University Honors Program joined Professor John Grady, Director of the Honors Program, to celebrate the end of the solicitation campaign for the John Grady Honors Program Scholarship Endowment. Alumni and friends toured the University Art Museum, and Grady (left), with his wife, Helen, also announced that the first Burke Fellow would be named in the fall. The fellowship honors Brother Daniel Burke (right), former President and founder of the University Honors Program (also founder and Director of the La Salle Art Museum). Since May 2002, many graduates and devotees of the Honors Program have contributed to the endowment, helping to raise more than $135,000. The endowment will generate funds for those upperclassmen in the Honors Program who would like to pursue educational activities outside of the Honors curriculum that will enhance their La Salle educational experience, and who might otherwise not be able to afford this opportunity.

a salute to the Class of 2005

lindback award winner

For his commitment to his students and to the University, Dr. Richard Mshomba was named the recipient of the 2005 Lindback Award for Distinguished Teaching at this year's Commencement exercises. Mshomba, who has taught Economics at La Salle for 14 years, was nominated by his students and fellow faculty members. They praised his skills as a teacher who "always takes extra time to ensure that all of his students understand." Mshomba, a native of Tanzania, has done extensive research on international and developmental economics, with an emphasis on Africa, and has been a frequent guest analyst on Voice of America, an international broadcasting service run by the U.S. government.

commencement speaker

Julie Pompizzi, '05, was chosen to represent her class as the University's Commencement speaker this year. A native of Upper Darby, Pompizzi graduated with a degree in Communication and English. Her speech reflected on the changes she and her fellow graduates had experienced over their years in college. "Change is a part of life, and just as we stood at the brink of transformation when we made the decision to come to La Salle, here, we meet the same fate," Pompizzi said to a sea of graduates in caps and gowns.

Commencement Honoree Karen Pushaw: Your Life Is Not Your Own

Karen Pushaw, '78, received an honorary Doctor of Humane Letters at La Salle's Commencement. After 10 years as a lawyer, Pushaw left her fast-paced career to devote her life to service at St. Francis Inn, a soup kitchen in Philadelphia's Kensington section. The following is excerpted from her address to graduates:

"My message today is simple, and it is this: Your life is not your own. You have been loved to love; you have been gifted to give. And so, your life is not your own. This is not something you will learn in hearing it today, but only in your experiences—if you are open to it.

"I would like to be able to tell you of many experiences I have had over the years at the Inn which have confirmed for me the truth of this simple message, but there isn't time, so I will limit myself to the story of Nikki. I first met Nikki when I came to the Inn 14 years ago.

"She was about 20, but she had already been (living) on the street for six years, and it showed. It showed in her broken bones and her black eyes. Yet there is something so appealing and beautiful about Nikki. For instance, one cold December day, as I was going into the Inn, Nikki handed me some papers. I thought they were flyers for a needle exchange, so I stuck them in my bag. Later that morning, I pulled out the papers and saw that they were individual Christmas messages for the staff, each one hand-lettered and decorated! We were deeply touched, and I remember thinking, how does such a loving spirit endure in this woman despite everything?

"So my question for you graduates today is: Who will be your Nikki? You see, not all of you are called to full-time service, but each of you is called to serve someone. On this beautiful Pentecost morning, the day that we as disciples are reminded of our call to go out and spread the good news in love and service, my message to you is: Go out and find your Nikki, because your life is not your own."

Karen R. Pushaw, '78, received a Doctor of Humane Letters, Honoris Causa, at this year's Commencement. In 1993, Pushaw gave up a career in law to help supervise the daily operation of St. Francis Inn, a soup kitchen in Philadelphia's Kensington section that serves 300 to 500 people a day.

Professor Earns High Marks

Thirty-six years after earning his first degree from La Salle University, Mark Ratkus, Ph.D., an Economics faculty member since 1973, received his second diploma, this one a graduate degree in Bilingual/Bicultural Studies.

In 1994, La Salle offered a new major in Economics and International Studies, which required students to take foreign language courses. Ratkus said he "felt it unfair to require my students to take a foreign language when I had never done so."

He took several courses in Spanish before enrolling in the Bilingual/Bicultural Studies graduate program, which is designed to educate working professionals in various levels of Spanish language and cultural sensitivity. "I chose Spanish because of its practicality with today's growing Latino population," he said.

Ratkus' progress in the program was delayed while he battled cancer. (He had to take a leave of absence, but is fine now.)

In 1996, Ratkus spent a month in Costa Rica studying its economy and working on his Spanish. Three years later, he studied in Mayagüez, Puerto Rico, and in 2003 he traveled to Argentina and Guatemala, where he developed an even better grasp of the language.

Ratkus' research for his master's degree helped identify resources for job placement and language skills for Philadelphia's Latino population. Ratkus looks forward to implementing what he has learned, such as developing courses that focus on the economy of Latin America.

La Salle Nursing Students Pursue Degrees While Serving in Iraq

BY MARIAN MORTON

Talk about distance learning.

Three La Salle nursing students didn't let the war in Iraq end their pursuit of a bachelor's degree. Tyneta Heath, Jody Austin, and Derrick Dash stuck with their studies—and all three graduated in May.

Heath and Austin, a technical sergeant and a master sergeant, respectively, in the Air Force Reserves, actually took their books with them when they were deployed.

Austin was sent to Germany, where she was stationed at a medical unit to care for soldiers wounded in Iraq. She completed two courses during her nine-month deployment. The School of Nursing mailed her exams, and one of Austin's colleagues, who is also a nurse practitioner, proctored the exams and evaluated her skills while caring for casualties in their unit.

"While doing the classes was very challenging given the circumstances, they also allowed me to think about something other than the situation at hand," Austin said.

Heath works in air transportation for the Air Force, and she served two five-month deployments, one to Kuwait and one to Germany. Her unit's duties included the transport of troops and equipment to wherever they were needed, and the transfer of wounded soldiers from Iraq to a military hospital in Germany. She kept up with her coursework and, like Austin, had an officer in her unit proctor her exams.

"My instructors and the administration of the School of Nursing could have told me just to start all over again once I got back, but they didn't. I got so much support," Heath said.

Dash, a 19-year Air Force veteran, had to take a break from courses when he was sent to Afghanistan and Iraq as a logistical aid to pilots. But he jumped right back into his studies when his deployments ended, juggling family, school, and a full-time job at Willow Grove Air Force Base. The work all paid off when he collected his diploma.

"I kept telling myself to focus," Dash said. "It was something I wanted to achieve, and once you set your mind to it, once you have a goal, you follow it."

Heath and Austin, who both work at the VA Hospital in Philadelphia, have also both set their sights on a master's degree in nursing. Dash hopes one day to work in an emergency room setting.

Jody Austin receives her Nursing degree from La Salle President Brother Michael J. McGinniss, F.S.C., Ph.D., '70, at Commencement in May

Monsignor McDermott, Frank Stanton, '51, To Receive Alumni Association's Highest Honors

Frank Stanton, '51

Monsignor Robert McDermott

La Salle University's Alumni Association will present the Signum Fidei Award to Monsignor Robert McDermott and the John J. Finley Award to Frank Stanton, '51, at its Annual Awards Dinner on November 18, 2005.

The Signum Fidei Award, the Alumni Association's highest honor, is given to an individual who has made "noteworthy contributions to the advancement of humanitarian principles in keeping with the Christian-Judeo traditions." Monsignor McDermott, pastor of St. Joseph's Pro-Cathedral in Camden, N.J., is founder of the St. Joseph's Carpenter Society, which rehabs abandoned homes for families in Camden. It also works with government and social agencies to create new housing projects. Since the society was founded in 1985, more than 600 homes have been built or renovated and then sold to low- or moderate-income families. Signum Fidei, meaning "sign of faith," is the motto of the Christian Brothers.

The Finley Award is given to an alum who has made significant contributions to the University. As a member of La Salle's Board of Trustees and Chair of the Board's Enrollment Services Committee from 1997 to 2001, Stanton provided valuable direction and leadership. Drawing on his distinguished career in marketing research, Stanton helped to develop strategies and techniques that have resulted in several years of enrollment success. Since 1997, the average size of the freshman class has grown from about 620 to about 820. Transfer applications have more than tripled in that time. The award is named for John J. Finley, '24, who served the University in many capacities after his graduation.

Philadelphia Newspaper Publisher To Be Honored By African American Alumni Association

Robert W. Bogle, the President and C.E.O. of the Philadelphia Tribune, will be honored with the Warren E. Smith, M.D., '54, Award at the African American Alumni Association Annual Dinner on Friday, November 4, 2005.

The Award is given annually to an exemplary leader in the African American community who has achieved professional success, demonstrated a commitment to Lasallian values, made significant contributions to the community, and served as an outstanding example to all La Salle students.

Bogle has worked at the Tribune, the nation's oldest and the Philadelphia region's largest newspaper serving the African American community, for more than 30 years, and he has held his current position since 1989.

Active in many professional, civic, and social organizations, Bogle is the current Chairman of the Hospitals and Higher Education Facilities Authority of Philadelphia and serves as a Commissioner of the Delaware River Port Authority. He has also served as a board member for the Workforce Investment Board, the African-American Chamber of Commerce, the Kimmel Center for the Performing Arts, the Philadelphia Convention and Visitors Bureau, and numerous other organizations.

Bogle served two terms as the President of the National Newspaper Publishers Association (NNPA), a federation of more than 200 African American newspapers. He is a five-time recipient of the NNPA's Rosswurm Award honoring the "Best Newspaper in America."

Warren E. Smith was one of the first African Americans to graduate from La Salle's pre-med program. He worked as La Salle's psychiatrist for 15 years before retiring in 1984. Proceeds from the Annual Dinner benefit the student scholarship fund created in his memory. The recipient of the Warren E. Smith, M.D., '54, Scholarship will be recognized at the event.

The evening will begin with a cocktail reception at 6:30 p.m., followed by dinner at 7:30 in the Union Ballroom. For more information, contact Corynda Hagamin at hagamin@lasalle.edu or 215.991.3595.

HOMECOMING

Oktoberfest

Saturday, October 29

Come back to campus for this annual celebration!

Spend the day with hundreds of your fellow alumni, friends, faculty, students, and Christian Brothers.

Homecoming is a great La Salle tradition you don't want to miss!

Look for your invitation in the mail and check out the details at: www.lasalle.edu/alumni.

REUNION 2005

Nearly 800 people celebrated Reunion on May 20-22 with a full lineup of festivities that reconnected alumni with classmates, faculty, their alma mater, and each other. Multiple generations of alumni, joined by family and friends, mingled at receptions, class parties, and picnics. On Friday evening, graduates met up in La Salle's Art Museum, and 250 young alumni were treated to a party at Finnegan's Wake Pub in Philadelphia. On Saturday, families turned out for an afternoon picnic, and the classes of 1955 and 1980 were honored with medals commemorating their 50th and 25th Reunions. The Sigma Phi Lambda fraternity saluted its alumni members, and alumni celebrated at their class parties. Afterwards, everyone gathered on the center of campus for an evening of Las Vegas-themed entertainment.

Student/Faculty Research: St. La Salle Would Approve

James A. Butler, Ph.D., '67

LA SALLE UNIVERSITY ("WHERE TEACHING COMES FIRST") honors in its name the patron saint of teaching. What, then, in the name of Saint John Baptist de La Salle could the editors of this magazine be thinking in highlighting research, that legendary antithesis to teaching, that notorious culprit in undermining personal contacts between university educators and their students?

Of course, any 10-year-old sitting at the computer and googling "frog" (or, more likely, "cyberspace") intuitively recognizes that research is essential for learning. And no one wants a teacher who simply mutters on for decades from those increasingly brittle graduate school notes. Far better it is for that teacher to be engaged in research of some sort, to be energized by new ideas and theories, perhaps even to be active in creating them.

Nevertheless, John Baptist de La Salle was a practical educator and did not have much interest in either theory or research. But it is, I think, the wrong approach to try to match everything that we do in a 21st-century university in Philadelphia to Saint La Salle's experiences in teaching pre-college-age students in 17th-century France. We might as well speculate what he would think of the Eiffel Tower—or of Terrell Owens.

We should instead consider the Lasallian tradition as it has developed over the last three centuries. Brother Emery Mollenhauer, our former provost and now a professor of English, has written that the most distinctive characteristic of Lasallian identity over time has been "association or partnership or brotherhood (and of course by 'brotherhood' here I intend the concept that includes sisterhood)." Moreover, that collaboration among everyone engaged at all levels of the educational enterprise is non-hierarchical: followers of Saint La Salle are called "brothers," not "fathers." What is especially Lasallian is structuring educational experiences in a collaborative mode.

When the University asked me to attend national meetings to determine how we might encourage more faculty-student partnerships in research, many people whom I met indicated that we would fail. No faculty, I was told, with our "heavy teaching loads" (their words; most La Salle faculty I know think of "teaching opportunities") would take on the extra work. Not only that: The amount of money we proposed to pay faculty mentors was thought by people at other institutions to be laughably puny. I thanked those people for their views, but I also knew what my La Salle colleagues could and would do.

This issue of the magazine provides details about just a few of the many La Salle faculty members and students who have happily and fruitfully worked together on research projects. I must admit, though, that I did receive comments about those tiny faculty stipends; my colleagues expressed surprise that they were paid anything at all for this splendid opportunity to join with students in collaborative research. A number of these activities have produced joint publications or conference papers; in the Lasallian non-hierarchical spirit, students—at faculty insistence—have at times been listed as principal or sole authors. Through such research experiences, participating students experience the thrill of experiential, or experimental, or scholarly discovery, and faculty members teach students one at a time.

Our research model thus promotes, rather than limits, personal interactions between the older adults and the younger adults who together engage in the continuing mission of the De La Salle Christian Brothers. In too many institutions, research has become like the imperious conductor of the orchestra; at La Salle, research is increasingly a faculty-student ensemble (with an occasional bravura solo). I can almost hear that practical educator, John Baptist de La Salle, applauding.

James A. Butler, Ph.D., '67, longtime English professor and former Chair of the department, serves as Director of Undergraduate Research for all three schools and the College of Professional and Continuing Studies.

La Salle University Provost Richard Nigro, Ph.D. (left), awards the Faculty Distinguished Scholar Award to James A. Butler, Ph.D., '67, at the University's recent Honors Convocation.

NAVIGATING THE MAZE

Student/Faculty Teams Take on Research Challenges

More and more, faculty in all disciplines are involving students in scholarly research or guiding students through their own explorations. Students get a chance to go beyond the classroom curriculum, contribute in some way to scholarship, and perhaps make a lasting impact. Their professors gain some much-needed assistance while giving students the one-on-one collegial interaction that can change lives forever. What follows is a small sampling of some of those collaborative research efforts, ranging from arts to sciences, from undergraduate to graduate, and from esoteric to hands-on.

From Student Researcher to Hired Expert

BY MARIAN MORTON

AMANDA TOLINO, '05, NEVER thought her internship at Campbell Soup Company would inspire a research project in art history. But once she started to explore the company's unconventional relationship with artist Andy Warhol, she saw the opportunity for thought-provoking research.

"I like modern art, and I've always had an affinity for Warhol because he took art in an entirely new direction," said Tolino, an art history and communication major who graduated in May. "It was fascinating to immerse myself in research that combined my two majors."

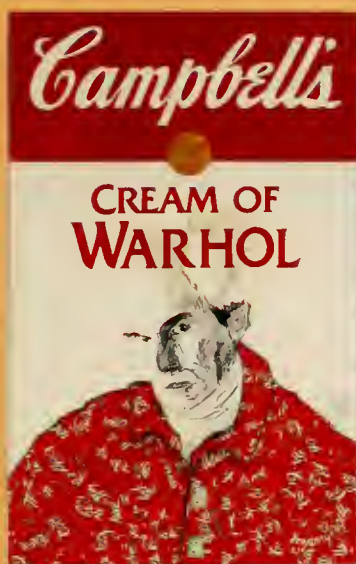

Tolino's project, entitled "Art Imitating Life Imitating Soup: Andy Warhol's Relationship with the Campbell Soup Company," examined how the avant-garde artist and the all-American soup company forged a close and mutually beneficial relationship after years of disagreement.

Some of Warhol's most recognizable works are depictions of Campbell Soup cans. When Warhol first exhibited his soup can paintings in 1962, the Campbell Soup Company sent a lawyer to investigate and considered filing a lawsuit. Eventually, the corporation realized art does play an important role in corporate advertising and marketing; therefore, the company could use Warhol and his talents to its advantage.

In the early 1980s, Warhol was commissioned to design the box for Campbell's new dried soup line. In a true merging of the art and advertising worlds, the product's launch was held at the Whitney Museum of American Art in New York, providing further evidence of Warhol's impact on the company's marketing practices.

"Warhol was really the first artist to bridge the gap between art and corporate America," Tolino said.

Warhol's name has become synonymous with Campbell's, and the company has capitalized on that connection. In the late 1990s, it ran a contest entitled "The Art of Soup," which was coined "The Search for the Next Andy Warhol." The public was invited to create, as Warhol once did, new interpretations of the classic red-and-white soup can design. The company collected more than 10,000 official entries, Campbell's Art of Soup Competition asked the public to re-imagine the soup can label, much like Andy Warhol did in his art. Entries included a wedding dress made entirely of Campbell labels and a Warhol-inspired soup. Photos courtesy of Campbell Soup Company.

the winner being an 11-year-old boy who depicted the can in Egyptian hieroglyphics on faux stone.

Campbell has also played on the public's fascination with Warhol by releasing a plethora of licensed products, ranging from Rosenthal china to special edition cans featuring Warhol's soup can paintings.

In conducting her research, Tolino scoured the Campbell corporate archives, which include records of the company's association with the artist; interviewed Campbell executives to discuss the issues of licensing and copyrights that arose with Warhol's use of the soup can in his art; and studied original Warhol works that reside at the company's world headquarters in Camden, N.J.

Siobhan Conaty, Ph.D., Assistant Professor of art history at La Salle, was Tolino's faculty mentor for her research project. She works with many students on independent research, and she said Tolino's project was especially effective because she was able to break new ground on the topic.

"Amanda's was an unusual and original look at Warhol's work, and I think Campbell's was very interested in what she discovered," Conaty said. "That's the benefit of undergraduate research—finding something new and making your own contribution to the field."

Tolino's work paid off in more ways than just earning credit for the lengthy paper she turned in at the end of the semester. She has parlayed her internship into a full-time job at Campbell. In fact, the company created the position of Public Affairs Assistant just for her. She'll be working with the Campbell Soup Foundation and area nonprofits, as well as on cause marketing campaigns with the brand communication team.

Word has also gotten around within the company that there's a new Warhol expert on staff. A director in her department even asked her to respond to media inquiries regarding licensing issues related to Andy Warhol's work.

"I never thought my project would go as far as it did, and that I would be looked upon as a source of knowledge on the subject," Tolino said. "Overall, it was a great experience."

Like Mother, Like Daughter: Two Generations Take on Independent Projects

BY JON CAROULIS

LA SALLE UNIVERSITY ENGLISH PROFESSOR JAMES BUTLER, Ph.D., '67, wondered why a student would do another independent research project on a topic unrelated to her major. Anne Alesiani, '06, had done a summer project on special education students; for the Fall 2005 semester she was seeking to do a study related to Eastern and Western literature.

Then Butler, who directs the University's Undergraduate Research Program for the University, found the answer: There are two Anne Alesianis. That is, there's Anne Alesiani and her daughter, Anna Alesiani, '06, both undergraduate students doing research projects in their respective majors.

Anne (the mom) is an elementary and special education major, and, while participating in a practicum at Simmons Elementary School in Horsham, she also began a research project with Education Professor Sharon Schoen, Ed.D., about the use of embedded instruction in combination with time delay as a teaching strategy with special needs students. Anne Alesiani is continuing her work with Schoen at the Widener Memorial School for students with physical disabilities during the Fall 2005 semester. She and Schoen hope that a paper on their research project will be selected for publication next year.

"It's been an amazing experience," said Anne Alesiani. "I've been able to experience first-hand the effects of different teaching strategies with different populations."

Anna, her daughter, is a writing track major in English, and one of her closest friends, Carekee Fung, suggested a project that examined how Eastern literature affected Fung and how Western literature influenced Alesiani. Both are reading novels by Eastern and Western writers and writing fiction and will examine how reading the novels influenced their writing. Their project is being overseen by Judith Musser, Ph.D., of the English Department.

Anna Alesiani says she and her mother have different research styles: "My mom works a lot harder," she says. "I tend to do everything at the last minute."

Discovering Her Vocation: Giavanna DeRita Researched Her Way to a Career Path

BY MAUREEN PICHE

LA SALLE SENIOR GIAVANNA DERITA HAS BIG PLANS for her future. The communication/Spanish double major is studying for the LSATs and, after law school, wants to dedicate her career to international law and protecting those whose voices are drowned out by violence, corruption, and bureaucracy.

This South Philly native admits, as of a year ago, she had no inkling her life's work was headed this way—not until foreign languages Professor Luisa Ossa suggested DeRita might want to consider an independent research project based on a book assignment.

Last spring, DeRita agreed to examine the displacement of AfroColombians in the region of Colombia known as El Choco. Originally brought to Colombia as slaves, AfroColombians have suffered decades of poverty, paramilitary violence, and governmental neglect.

"They're displaced because people want to exploit their land," DeRita explained, noting that the coastal area is loaded with natural resources. "They're poor people who have no recourse or publicity. Even within Colombia, many people don't know this situation exists."

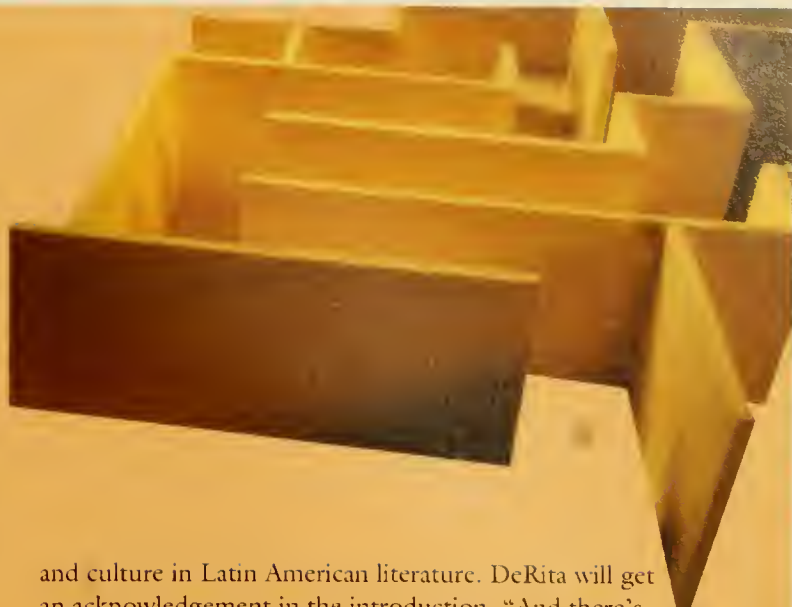

When DeRita completed her research, she presented her findings at the Foreign Languages Symposium at La Salle last March. Realizing DeRita's passion for the subject matter, Ossa asked her to participate in the professor's own research project she was conducting through a School of Arts and Sciences faculty/student research grant—Afro-Hispanics and Asians in the Works of Manuel Zapata Olivella.

"I knew she had a deep interest in the subject area, and she was driven," Ossa said of DeRita. "By having help, I was able to acquire a lot more materials than I could on my own."

Over the summer, DeRita helped Ossa narrow down information relevant to the subject by reading through research and literary reviews. DeRita concentrated on a second author, Mayra Montero, who wrote about Asians in the Caribbean.

"I definitely gained so much knowledge about the relationships and the interconnectedness of the cultures there," DeRita said. "I also became a much more organized person—I had never done a research project on this scale before."

As a result of the research, Ossa and a professor from Vanderbilt University are co-authoring a compilation of original essays on the representation of Asian people and culture in Latin American literature. DeRita will get an acknowledgement in the introduction. "And there's still a possibility we could collaborate again when I begin writing," Ossa said.

DeRita said the two projects helped push her toward the decision to concentrate on international law and ethics. "These projects were a huge part for me making that decision. I never would have known that I cared so much," she said. "I definitely don't want to just stand in a courtroom and defend bad guys."

Helping Her Fellow Students

BY MARIAN MORTON

GROWING UP IN A FAMILY OF SEVEN CHILDREN, ERIN Brennan had plenty of opportunities to observe her mom and dad's parenting style. Now that she's a senior studying psychology at La Salle and taking on an independent research project, she's interested in investigating how parents' styles affect certain behaviors in their children.

"Looking at my house and family patterns, each of the children had a different perception of how they were being raised and the style of parenting my parents used, whether it was authoritarian or authoritative," Brennan said. "I wanted to see if this has any effect on alcohol use once students get to college."

To collect the data she will use in her study, Brennan plans to distribute questionnaires to students on campus that ask their perceptions of how they were raised—in a strict household, a lenient one, or somewhere in between? The survey will then ask about students' alcohol consumption. Brennan hopes to be able to determine whether problem drinkers identify a certain parenting style more than others, and whether gender is a factor.

Brennan will work with Erin O'Hea, Ph.D., Assistant Professor of psychology, on the year-long research project. O'Hea primarily teaches graduate courses, but she said she sees undergraduate research as vital, whether a student decides to pursue a career in psychology or moves on to another field.

"Research pervades our life because it is integrated into so many professions, including health care, economics, and sales," O'Hea said. "That experience of completing an independent study looks good for graduate schools and to future employers."

This is O'Hea and Brennan's second collaboration. Last spring, Brennan volunteered her time with a study O'Hea was conducting on exercise—why people do it, how it has an impact on mental health, and whether certain motivators for exercise are predictors of eating problems in college students.

Brennan, who wants to pursue a career in clinical psychology, said she sees studies like the one she's preparing as a way to help people understand their behaviors.

"If I could wind up helping someone through a study, to stop something before it becomes a problem in their lives, that's the goal," Brennan said.

A Measure of Devotion

BY ANDREW LAZOR

FIRST, THERE WERE SCRAPBOOKS. THEN CAME TV AND the Trekkies and conventions. Now, with the Internet, there are fansites, shrines created by the fans of the famous and infamous. So who are these folks and why do they do it?

John Beatty, Ph.D., interim Chair of the Digital Arts and Multimedia Design Program, and Maureen Cech, '05, tried to find out in an independent research project.

They collaborated to investigate the motivations of people who created fansites. From their data, they presented a paper at the national conference of the Association for Education in Journalism and Mass Communication in August in San Antonio, Texas.

Beatty and Cech sent e-mails to 1,500 fansite creators, asking them to take an online survey, and got about 200 responses. Cech then sent those who replied a link to a more detailed survey, asking more about what they felt and thought. About one-third of those contacted responded to the survey.

According to their survey, most of the fansite creators said they made their Web pages to get more information out about the subject of their site, to communicate with other fans of the subject, and to learn how to make a Web site.

"There was more of the third reason than I thought there would be," said Beatty.

Cech, who earned a bachelor's degree in English, is currently pursuing a master's degree at the University of Delaware.

"I encourage anyone interested in graduate school to do undergraduate research," Cech said. "Since you do your research independently and collaborate with a professor, you are a partner rather than a student. It enhances your undergraduate experience."

Chemistry majors Patricia Mangel (center) and Lou Mattioli (left), who participated in student-faculty research with Assistant Professor of Chemistry/Biochemistry Michael Prushan, Ph.D. (right), presented their research poster, "Synthesis and Characterization of Equilateral Nickel (II) Triangular Complexes," at the 228th National Meeting of the American Chemistry Society (ACS) in the spring.

Most of the Web sites Beatty and Cech looked at were more graphics-oriented than content-rich, but they did have interesting information. Beatty found one person who made a Web site for singer Peter Cetera on his own; Cetera then saw it and asked the creator to make it his official Web site.

Chess Game Becomes Tool for Discovery

BY JON CAROULIS

PLAYING CHESS MIGHT BE A GAME FOR THOMAS PLICK, '06, but for several months the Mathematics and Computer Science major studied various aspects of it for research projects with faculty.

As part of his Honors Program project, Plick spent the Spring of 2005 working with Mathematics and Computer Science Assistant Professor Stephen Andrilli, Ph.D., on testing a modification to a chess search algorithm.

"I had no idea how hard the logic was until I sat down to write it out," Plick said.

He took that research in another direction when he and Associate Professor Raymond Kirsch, Ph.D., also of the Mathematics and Computer Science Department, used it to create a computer program that would allow a user to see the chess pieces move around, first in two dimensions and then in three dimensions. They worked together in the Summer of 2005, meeting once a week.

The Value of Research

BY JON CAROULIS

WHEN IT COMES TO EVALUATING RISK, SIZE IS CRITICAL.

Dino Dedie, '06, has been working with Finance Professor Les Barenbaum, Ph.D., to study factors that affect the value of privately held companies and the amount of risk to investors in those firms.

Publicly held companies are required by law to disclose their assets, profits, and other factors that are used to affix a value to the company. Privately held companies, however, are not required to make such information public. What Barenbaum and Dedie are studying is how the factor of size affects the value of a privately held firm.

"In the past, size factor has been ignored in assigning value to a firm," Dedie said.

Generally speaking, the smaller the company, the greater the risk to investors, and although one would expect higher rewards, the actual rewards are higher than predicted by financial theory, he said. "We are trying to see if size truly plays a role in price-to-earnings valuation," Dedie said.

Dedie, who is pursuing minors in economics and international studies, says he spends five to six hours a week on the project. He and Barenbaum have been meeting once a week for an hour during the Fall 2005 semester to discuss the project. Dedie is a student in La Salle's Honors Program; his project with Barenbaum is due to be completed in December.

"I'm definitely learning a lot, which for me is important. The project has given me some perspective in evaluating businesses and the time and attention to detail that's involved," he said.

Nutritious and Delicious: Nursing Graduate Points Students Toward Healthy Foods

BY MARIAN MORTON

BETWEEN LATE-NIGHT PIZZA DELIVERIES AND STRESS-induced junk-food cravings, college students aren't exactly known for their healthy food choices. But there are healthy options to be found in La Salle's dining halls, and one nutrition student's research project aims to draw attention to them.

Heather Fischer graduated from La Salle with her bachelor's degree in nutrition in May and is now completing an internship with the Campus Food Services

Department as a step toward becoming a registered dietician. She is working to develop a program called Fit Smart, which will promote the dining halls' nutritional offerings.

The program will be marketed to the entire University community, but especially to undergraduate students, Fischer said.

"Some of the younger students coming from having mom and dad take care of them for their first 18 years need some help identifying what is healthy now that they are on their own and making more decisions for maybe the first time in their lives," she said.

This fall, Fischer, along with Jule Anne Henstenburg, Director of La Salle's Nutrition Program, and representatives from Food Services, Athletics, and Health Services, will work on identifying, through a survey, what students' food habits are now—what they're eating and what their perceptions are of the meals offered on campus. The surveys also aim to determine which foods students would like added or changed in the University's current menu so they can make healthier food choices.

Eventually, the Fit Smart program will include posting messages around campus about the value of healthy eating habits and developing sample menus to highlight the nutritious options in the dining hall on a particular day.

"There are healthy choices available now in the dining hall; students just are not aware," Henstenburg said. "Pizza is actually a healthy choice, and there are a lot of ethnic foods offered that are really interesting and healthy. If we can change some of the students' perceptions, we may be able to influence the choices they make."

Fischer said her research project is more about helping students than adding to her résumé.

"I want to emphasize that you don't have to change your entire life, and none of us are perfect all the time," she said. "But every little thing you can do to improve your health counts."

Dorm Life and the Common Cold

BY JON CAROULIS

DENISE FITZPATRICK, '06, LEARNED A FEW LESSONS while doing a research project involving college student health issues. One was that it's hard to get students in dining halls to fill out questionnaires while they're eating. The other—that La Salle students said they were aware of their behaviors when it came to communicable diseases, such as the common cold or meningitis.

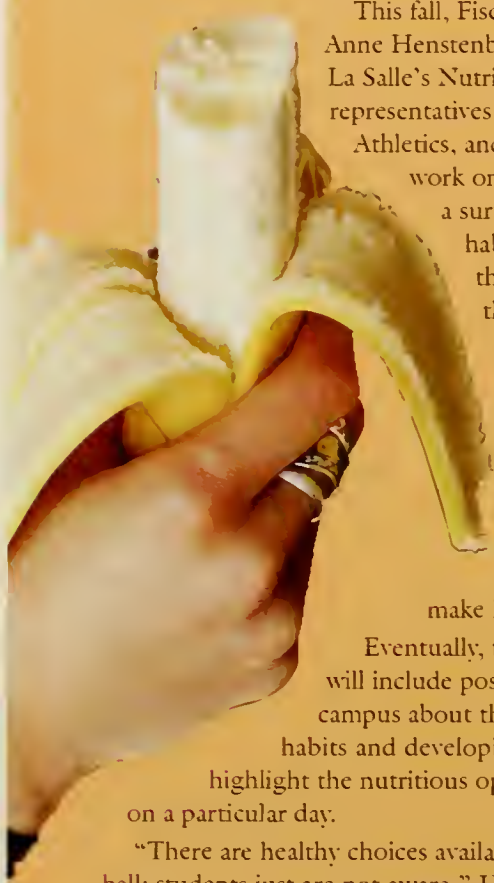

"I was living in the dorms then, so I wanted to do a study on college students," Fitzpatrick said. "It was a lot of work. I collected surveys from about 70 students. One thing I learned was how to do research so now in my senior class on research I know what to do and I'm not lost."

She worked with Associate Professor Patti Zuzelo, Ed.D., APRN-BC, C.N.S., of the School of Nursing. "I thought her idea was great and she had a real enthusiasm for the project," said Zuzelo, who, in a joint appointment with Albert Einstein Healthcare System, has worked with nurses to access, evaluate, and apply research to their work. "Denise had to develop her own questionnaire and had to critique what she had done."

From the study, it appeared that students did consider the possibility of catching a communicable disease in their habits and behaviors, but Fitzpatrick said the results were probably skewed because many completed the surveys in the presence of their friends or classmates, who may have influenced their responses to certain questions.

Fitzgerald works part-time at the University of Pennsylvania Hospital in the maternity ward. She is considering graduate school, and she said research will definitely be a part of her full-time nursing career.

"Where I work now, in everything that we do, we ask if this is the best way to do it and, if not, is there a better way," said Fitzpatrick. "We're not just practicing a (treatment) because there's a tradition of doing it that way. There's a reason why we do things the way we do."

EDWARD FIERKO, '63: WHY I GIVE BACK

IN THE FOUR DECADES SINCE EDWARD J. FIERKO, '63, graduated from La Salle University with a degree in accounting, he's served in the military, held leadership roles in large corporations, lived all over the country, and raised two children. He attributes a large part of his success to the education he received at La Salle.

"Alums like myself owe La Salle a tithe of gratitude for our success," Fierko said. "My generation is unique in the opportunities afforded to us with the growth of the economy from the 1960s to 2000, and our education at La Salle propelled many of us into great careers. I personally believe it's time to give back to the University."

When Fierko, the youngest of six children and the only one to attend college, was deciding on a college, he had a few criteria in mind: It had to be a school that he could commute to easily, and it had to offer a solid education at a reasonable cost. He found that La Salle fit the bill.

"It was a great liberal arts education, which was quite mind-opening for someone who was looking to go off into a business career," Fierko said. "The lessons of the Christian Brothers in ethics and morality have served me very well in a career of having responsibility for managing and leading people. I saw that Catholic education as a very strong influence on my career."

Fierko, who lives in Marlton, N.J., retired in 2003 after a career with General Electric, the Marmon Group, and Osmonics. He now owns a consulting business, focusing in strategic development projects for companies, and is active on the board of directors of the Water Quality Research Foundation.

A longtime donor to the Annual Fund, Fierko seized an opportunity to do more for his alma mater with the launch of Shoulder to Shoulder: Securing the Future, La Salle's $25 million major gift initiative to strengthen the University endowment and fund construction of a new science and technology center.

In 2005, Fierko established a $100,000 endowment fund for the Business Scholars Co-op Program, which will offer undergraduate students the opportunity to gain significant hands-on experience in their intended career fields. The endowment fund has been named in honor of Gregory O.

Bruce, former Dean of La Salle's School of Business.

From a student's perspective, a co-op provides invaluable exposure to real-life responsibilities in the workplace and may lead to a job offer after graduation. Employers also benefit from the chance to mentor students and groom them for full-time positions in their companies.

"This program offers a way for business students to see the various avenues they can take in pursuing their careers," Fierko said. "In a co-op, their progress is measured, they are held accountable, they can see their contributions to the company, and they get paid for it as well."

Fierko has spread the word about La Salle all over the country as a businessman and alumnus, and he intends to stay involved in raising the University's profile and academic reputation nationally and internationally. His generous gift to the Business Scholars Co-op Program does not end his commitment to giving to the University and the School of Business.

"The bottom line is, it's payback time," Fierko said. "If you've been rewarded in your career financially, you should be sharing some of that reward and helping your University to continue its legacy of providing a quality education for current and future students."

President's Reception Held in New Campus Buildings

MAJOR DONORS TO THE UNIVERSITY WERE RECENTLY THANKED FOR THEIR generosity with a celebration and formal naming of the campus' newest additions, a residence hall and dining facility.

For the first time since 1989, La Salle University students are living in a new residence hall: St. Basil Court, located on the University's South Campus. They're also dining in the new Treetops Café, adjacent to St. Basil.

The President's Reception was held in the new café, and those present witnessed the dedication of St. Basil Court in honor of the Sisters of St. Basil the Great. The nuns once ran St. Basil's Orphanage on South Campus before the University purchased the property. In addition, several alumni were inducted into the De La Salle Society: William R. Sasso, Esq., '69; Joseph R. Buckley, '69; Mr. and Mrs. James R. Guntle Jr., '75; J. Anthony Hayden, '67; and Margaret Mary (Breslin), '98, and William J. Markmann, M.D., '70. The society recognizes donors whose cumulative lifetime contributions to the University total $100,000 and above.

The $26 million facility is housing 428 students in 157 rooms this semester, and 30 percent of the residents are freshmen.

The three-story complex consists of a central entrance with wings. Three wings feature suites of two bedrooms for four students with a connected bath. The fourth wing features double-occupancy rooms with communal bath rooms.

There are three quiet study rooms and one group lounge, and there are plans to add a dance studio.

The café can seat 300 and can accommodate up to 700 meals per day.

THERAPY FOR BODY AND MIND

The Eells Use Karate to Help Kids, and Themselves

BY ANDREW LAZER, '06

AS INSTRUCTORS AT SPECIAL NEEDS KARATE IN MARLTON, N.J., Chuck and Maureen Eells teach martial arts to children with serious disabilities. Once they leave the studio, however, their work doesn't end. Chuck suffers from amyotrophic lateral sclerosis (ALS), commonly known as Lou Gehrig's Disease. Despite this hardship, he and his wife have run the program for nearly 10 years.

The South Philadelphia natives met before college; Chuck originally attended another school, but transferred to La Salle University to be with Maureen—who graduated from La Salle in 1984 with a degree in special education. Chuck graduated a year earlier with a degree in finance. Maureen taught for Burlington County, N.J., Special Services for over 10 years. Chuck worked in a hospital for several years before managing a law firm.

The couple started taking karate classes together soon after they were married. "It was wonderful," Maureen said. "It was something we always did together." She started teaching karate when she was invited to work as an instructor for Evensham Township Recreation Council.

Soon, Maureen combined her career and her hobby. "I had those years of teaching under my belt and I had the karate years under my belt. I thought, 'Let me pair them together.'" The result: Special Needs Karate (SNK), a program that provides instruction to individuals with physical and emotional conditions. The Eells teach children with muscular dystrophy, Down syndrome, autism, and many other challenging disabilities.

Teaching SNK was initially difficult for Maureen. "When I first started the program, it was like salmon swimming upstream. Once I got a core group, it became easier because I could use them as role models. I sometimes don't know if a child is going to be able to get it. I've learned to just give them time," she said. Maureen applied her special-ed teaching experience to SNK to develop strategies for teaching each student. "Anyone can teach a curriculum, but teaching is an art, and that's what La Salle gave me. La Salle taught me the art of education and how to teach people."

Maureen started SNK by herself, but Chuck soon became involved. After giving birth to twins, Maureen would often be too exhausted to teach. Chuck would volunteer to take over classes for her. "Some days, I'd be so tired and ask him if he wanted to go. He started to enjoy it and would offer to alternate." The program soon became another way for the couple to spend time together. His dedication has not wavered since being diagnosed with ALS in 1999.

Chuck's special needs have helped him establish a connection with the disabled children he instructs. Maureen sees her husband's commitment as a compelling force for beginners. "(He's saying,) 'I'm out here. I'm showing up. My spirit's here.' It gives the kids incentive," she explained.

The Eells' situation helps them relate to the challenges their students face. "We have a girl who has a problem with motor skills. Chuck would say, 'My arm is like Danielle's.' I always understood how to work with people and how to make the best of any situation. He didn't always understand that. Now he lives it firsthand. He always says that he's not handicapped; the only way you're handicapped is if you choose not to do something. (Teaching) makes him feel good about himself, and the kids appreciate that someone is being as human as they are."

Maureen, who has four children of her own, considers herself a second mother to many of her pupils. "There are so many students that have been there since day one who are very close to getting a black belt. It's like one of my own children getting a black belt. We've watched them grow into people who actually look and act like martial artists."

The impact of the couple's enthusiasm affects people on many levels. Maureen is consistently astonished by the tremendous leaps her pupils take. While some are unable to vocalize their appreciation, it is reflected through their families. "I (love to) see the students change. Their families are so grateful. We've had several children who look like totally different kids after they complete the program. I think karate is one of the best things to ever happen to some of them."

Both Maureen and Chuck understand the formative power of their teaching and how karate instills strength into children forced to fight battles every day. Although Maureen has fun teaching SNK, she maintains that the program's impact runs much deeper. "It's a discipline, not a sport. It's a commitment—that's a big word in my vocabulary. It's a commitment that you make to yourself."

CARE AND COMFORT IN THE WAKE OF A DISASTER

Leonard Rubinstein, M.D., '75, Treated Hurricane Katrina Victims in New Orleans

BY MARIAN MORTON

THE DAY BEFORE HURRICANE KATRINA HIT, AS thousands of residents streamed away from the Gulf Coast, teams of doctors, nurses, and other health care personnel, including at least one La Salle graduate, headed into the region to respond to the looming crisis.

Leonard Rubinstein, M.D., '75, a Sarasota, Fla.-based facial plastic and body contour cosmetic surgeon, was deployed as a Federal Medical Officer along with his Florida 3 Disaster Medical Assistance Team (DMAT) and spent a total of 11 days in a field hospital that they set up in New Orleans International Airport.

In that time, Rubinstein said, he saw human nature at its best and at its worst. He witnessed violence as evacuees became increasingly exhausted and frustrated, but he also saw people with no medical background or expertise step forward to help out in any way they could.

"People who had gone through so much turmoil took it upon themselves to help others in the same situation," he said. "They stepped forward to say, 'I'm not a physician, but I can push a stretcher. I may not be able to perform surgery, but I can hand out lunches.' It's the simple gestures in extending yourself to others that make you a hero."

In the immediate aftermath to Hurricane Katrina, Rubinstein was stationed in Baton Rouge at Louisiana State University's football stadium, which had filled with evacuees. His team established order in the stadium and set up a field hospital to treat the sick and injured.

The team then moved on to the airport in New Orleans, which had been spared from the flooding that devastated the rest of the city. Since the airport's runways were open, it could receive the supplies needed to run a hospital and take care of the tens of thousands of evacuees who poured in.

Working 20-plus-hour shifts with no electricity and limited ventilation in the first few days, medical personnel, including nurses, doctors, mental health counselors, pharmacists, and security officers, treated more than 4,000 patients. Many had been evacuated from city hospitals and nursing homes and needed medications. Some had suffered heart attacks or strokes or had missed several days of dialysis; others had injuries more directly related to

LA SALLE UNIVERSITY COMMUNITY QUICK TO JOIN IN POST-HURRICANE EFFORTS

In keeping with the Christian Brothers tradition, students, faculty, and staff wasted little time coming up with funds and other efforts to help those affected by the recent hurricanes.

Students have already raised $5,000 to support the relief efforts. The Point, a committee of seven student organizations that speak on behalf of the student body, headed up the fundraising, receiving contributions from the campus community and student organizations. They've also created a Web site dedicated to their mission on behalf of the hurricane victims.

The University's Office of University Ministry and Service (UMAS) organized a prayer vigil on September 7 and started an online book of prayers for the victims. UMAS is also looking into service trips that can be planned to have La Salle students help with the relief efforts. The collections taken at the Sunday liturgies on campus since the disaster have been directed to hurricane relief.

Individual student groups have also gotten involved. La Salle's radio station, WEXP, held a raffle for concert tickets, while the Commuter and Off-Campus Student organization (CAOS) established a Halloween raffle, and the Student Government Association sponsored a pig roast to raise funds.

the storm, like cuts from broken glass or debris and chemical burns from the contaminated flood waters. Women were going into premature labor, and about 25 babies were born at the airport M.A.S.H. hospital.

As the Chief Medical Officer for his team, Rubinstein was in charge of triage and directing patients to the proper care, providing medical and surgical care for the needy, coordinating the volunteer physician and nursing staff, and assisting with the evacuation of patients from the airport for further medical care.

The atmosphere was tense at times, Rubinstein said, but the DMAT system was successful in bringing order to a potentially chaotic situation.

"No matter how much you plan, it's very tough to prepare for that massive number of displaced people," he said. "But for all the criticism and politics surrounding the emergency response, a lot of lives were saved."

LASALLIAN SCHOOLS AFFECTED

Students, faculty, administrators, and Christian Brothers from four Lasallian schools in the New Orleans area have endured great hardship in the weeks since Hurricane Katrina and Hurricane Rita devastated the Gulf Coast; however, thanks to hard work and donations from around the world, school is back in session for many students.

De La Salle High School in New Orleans, despite sustaining some structural damage and being occupied by National Guard troops in the weeks after the storm, reopened for students on October 18. St. Paul's School in Covington, La., lost many trees on its campus, but classes were able to start on September 20 with most students and teachers in attendance. Christian Brothers School in New Orleans has temporarily moved to Archbishop Rummel High School in Metairie, La.

Magnolia, the Lafayette, La., headquarters of the Provincialate for the New Orleans-Santa Fe District of the Christian Brothers Conference and a home for retired and infirm Brothers, was evacuated ahead of Hurricane Rita but suffered only minor damage.

Soon after returning home from New Orleans, Rubinstein was deployed again, this time to Houston to prepare for Hurricane Rita. Fortunately, that storm did not bring the destruction and the health crisis that Katrina had, but Rubinstein said his team members have learned lessons from their experience in New Orleans that can be applied to future disasters.

Rubinstein has been involved with DMAT for about five years, but his interest in rescue work dates back to his days as a biology student at La Salle, when he volunteered with the 50th Ward Community Ambulance Association in Philadelphia. He also worked as an emergency room physician at several Philadelphia hospitals while completing his specialty training in Ear, Nose, and Throat/Head and Neck Surgery at Thomas Jefferson University.

"La Salle encourages a feeling of service, of extending yourself to others," Rubinstein said. "Those values empower us to be helpful in a time of need."

Donations for hurricane relief for those in the New Orleans area may be sent to: Hurricane Fund; Christian Brothers Conference; 4351 Garden City Drive; Suite 200; Landover, MD 20785-7225. Checks may be made payable to the Christian Brothers Conference with Hurricane Fund written in the memo line or as a separate note. For more information, call 301.459.9410.

ALUMNI ASSOCIATION CONTRIBUTES

The La Salle University Alumni Association has donated $1,000 to hurricane relief in the names of the 69 La Salle alumni who live in Louisiana, Mississippi, and Alabama.

"It was a simple case of Explorers helping Explorers," said Mike Diccicco, '71, President of the La Salle Alumni Association, "and we (the whole board) have been touched by two separate thank-you notes that we've received from alums living in Katrina's wake. Both of them told us how much the Alumni Association gesture meant to them personally. I think we did a good thing."

Seven New Trustees Appointed

La Salle's Board of Trustees has seven new faces this fall, representing the business, medical, and educational communities.

Susan M. Barrett, '94, is President of Dearden, Maguire, Weaver, & Barrett, a professional investment management consulting firm where she has worked for 20 years. She is also the co-founder and President of Delancey Capital Group, a minority-owned, Philadelphia-based investment counseling firm that manages assets for large public and private institutions. She lives in Haddonfield, N.J., with her husband, Russ, and her daughter, Sarah.

John M. Daly, M.D., '69, has been Dean of the School of Medicine at Temple University since 2002. He is an internationally renowned surgeon whose clinical work and research are in the fields of surgical oncology, metabolism, and nutrition. Daly won the University's Holroyd Award in 1995. He and his wife, Mary, live in Gladwyne, Pa., and have six children.

Joseph A. Frick, '74, was elected President and Chief Executive Officer of Independence Blue Cross in January 2005. He has worked at IBC since 1993, serving in various human resources and administrative roles, and he previously worked for Philadelphia Newspapers Inc. and Westinghouse Electric Corporation. He and his wife, Amy, live in Newtown Square, Pa., and have two children.

Brother Richard Kestler, F.S.C., '65, became President of La Salle College High School in July 2005. During his five-decade career as an administrator and educator, he has served as President of West Philadelphia Catholic School and Archbishop Carroll High School in Radnor, Pa., and as Director of the St. Gabriel's Hall System, among other positions. He has been a professed Christian Brother since 1960.

Denise D. Malecki, '85, is a Partner with Accenture in its North America Resources Group. Through her work with Greater Philadelphia Cares, she has created a partnership between Accenture and Harrington Elementary School in Philadelphia to create a better environment for underprivileged kids. She and her husband, Tom, have two children.

William J. Markmann, M.D., '70, is the President of Orthopedic Surgery & Rehabilitation Associates. He is the President of the Association of Orthopedic Surgeons and received La Salle's Holroyd Award in 1992. He and his wife, Margaret "Candy" Markmann, '98, an adjunct professor

IN MEMORIAM: JOAN SCOTT

Joan (Rosenwald) Scott, an emeritus member of La Salle's Board of Trustees, died peacefully at her home in Haverford, Pa., on Sept. 29, 2005, at age 84.

One of the first women trustees of La Salle, Mrs. Scott served from 1973 to 1993. She was also awarded an honorary Doctor of Humane Letters Degree in 1990. As a trustee, she was a tireless advocate of enhanced student services and instrumental in the University's advent and growth in the fine arts.

She is survived by her husband of 62 years, Isadore "Scotty" Scott. She willed her body to science to help discover a cure for Alzheimer's disease. Services were privately held, but a public memorial is being planned for later in the fall.

in La Salle's History Department, live in Huntingdon Valley, Pa., and have five children, three of whom are La Salle alums.

Thomas F. McGowan, '76, is the Managing Partner of McGowan Investors LP, a financial investment firm he founded in 2003. He previously worked at Goldman Sachs, TFM Investment Group (an options-trading firm he founded in 1982), and the Philadelphia Stock Exchange. He and his wife, Eileen, live in Philadelphia, Pa., and have three children.

McManness Takes Helm as Vice President for Business Affairs

Matthew S. McManness brings 25 years of experience in higher education to his new position as Vice President for Business Affairs at La Salle. Before joining the University's senior administrative team in August, McManness served as Vice President for Finance and Administration at Anne Arundel Community College in Maryland.

In his first weeks on the job, McManness said he has taken the opportunity to become familiar with the culture and traditions of the La Salle community.

"I'm doing everything I can to learn the values that the University cherishes, and to be respectful of them," he said. "I want to really focus on building on the quality traditions that already exist here."

A native Texan, McManness holds a bachelor's degree from Gettysburg College and a master's degree from Shippensburg University. He has held administrative positions in financial operations, human resources, auxiliary services, advancement, facilities, and capital development at eight institutions, including Dartmouth College, Towson University, and the Maryland Institute College of Art.

McManness said he has been impressed by La Salle's administrators, faculty, and students and is eager to get involved in implementing the University's vision for the future.

"I am assessing the financial capacity of the University to meet its mission and my division's ability to provide a high standard of service for the institution," he said. "The University has a lot of very visionary goals, and I'm working hard to implement creative solutions to meet those goals."

Brazina Fills Role of Interim Dean for School of Business

Paul R. Brazina, a longtime La Salle University accounting professor, has been named interim Dean of the University's School of Business while the school seeks a successor for Gregory O. Bruce, M.B.A. '81, who had been Dean since 1994. Bruce will remain on the faculty in the Management Department.

Brazina arrived at La Salle in 1977 and has received the Lindback Award for teaching excellence. He also founded the Electronic Commerce Institute and the E-Commerce Certificate program (which are open to all La Salle students, regardless of major).

Brazina said he will not apply for the permanent Dean's position. "I like teaching too much," he said. He wanted to be the interim Dean to initiate several programs and ideas "that have the full support of the faculty and the provost" and will be continued by the next Dean.

He plans to start an Applied Research Center at the School, in which faculty would consult with area businesses that would send employees to work with faculty and students on educational projects.

Bruce's accomplishments as Dean included the school receiving accreditation from the Association to Advance Collegiate Schools of Business—only 20 percent of business schools worldwide receive this. In 2004, the school created the Business Scholars Co-op Program in which students complete three-month and six-month co-op externships in their junior and senior years. The Gregory O. Bruce Business Scholars Co-op Program Endowment has been created to help fund the program.

La Salle Museum Director Br. Daniel Burke, F.S.C., Retires

Brother Daniel Burke, F.S.C., Ph.D., has retired as Director of the La Salle University Art Museum after nearly 40 years of carefully selecting and shepherding the collection. The President Emeritus, English professor, art-lover, and poet stepped down at the end of July, and now plans to spend his time fulfilling his passion for writing.

"The creation and development of the La Salle University Art Museum has been a labor of at least two loves for Br. Daniel—for La Salle University, which he has served for most of his career as a Christian Brother, and for art," said La Salle President Brother Michael J. McGinniss, F.S.C., Ph.D., '70, who spoke at a retirement party for Br. Daniel this summer. "For generations to come, everyone who is a part of La Salle University can be delighted by this union of his 'two loves.'"

Those who know Br. Daniel are familiar with his reputation for understatement and modesty. "'We'd like to think of it as a good beginning.' He's been saying that about the collection for 30 years," said Caroline Wistar, longtime Curator at the museum. It's that tendency to play down the quality and extent of the collection that catches visitors off-guard when they enter the museum. "People come in and 'ooh' and 'ah' when they see the place," Wistar said. "They expect it's going to be a collection of student art or a temporary exhibition of contemporary art, as is expected in so many college and university museums."

But, in fact, the museum houses some 450 paintings, 54 sculptures, and 3,500 works on paper, including a special collection of rare Bibles. The artwork stretches from the Renaissance to the 21st century and includes works by Boudin, Rembrandt, Tanner, Peale, Eakins, and Rouault, to name just a few. Initially, La Salle financially supported the purchase of art, but that soon shifted to gifts from generous benefactors and shrewd trading up on the part of Br. Daniel and Wistar.

Edward J. Sozanski, the Philadelphia Inquirer art critic, recently wrote that the museum is "one of Philadelphia's hidden and vastly underappreciated delights—an elegant art museum in miniature, a hushed and beautiful aesthetic refuge."

Br. Daniel's inspiration for the museum's arrangement comes from one of the finest collections in the country, the Phillips Collection in Washington, D.C. Much like La Salle's setup, the Phillips is divided into rooms. "It's elegant, yet very homey," Wistar noted. "Br. Daniel went there and to the National Gallery repeatedly when he studied at Catholic University in Washington for so many years, drinking in the paintings and nursing a connoisseur's vision."

Wistar says she has always marveled over Br. Daniel's determination and foresight. When he first announced the start of the collection in 1965 to enhance students' art appreciation, its housing was a big question mark. Close to a decade later, the collection found a home in several rooms on the lower level of Olney Hall. "'With the imaginative use of modern resources,' to quote Br. Daniel, he turned a bleak cinderblock basement into a beautiful little museum." Wistar said. "He just thought, 'It can be done.' And the thing is, it worked!"

For almost 49 years, Br. Daniel has worn many hats at La Salle, including English professor, academic vice president, and president (from 1969 to 1976). He continues to live at a Brothers' residence near the University, and he makes frequent visits to campus.

As Br. Michael noted, Br. Daniel's love for both the literary and the visual arts has been indelibly linked with his strong faith and life's work as a Christian Brother. In Br. Daniel's own words, "If you think of God as being all true, all good, and all beautiful, then paintings are little hints of God that expand the soul."

Director of Mural Arts Project Receives Honorary Degree for Efforts to Bring Art and Hope to the City

Jane Golden, Director of the City of Philadelphia's Mural Arts Project, was presented with an honorary degree at the University's Academic Convocation Ceremony this October, and transfixed the audience with her message of using art as a means to heal, unite, and bridge.

"As the coordinator of city-wide art programs, she oversees after-school and summer programs that serve over 2,000 children and teens across Philadelphia," said Siobhan Conaty, Ph.D., an assistant professor of fine arts at La Salle who sponsored Golden for the degree. "In addition, Ms. Golden, over the last three years, has created a large social services unit that serves young people who are chronically truant, first-time offenders, and young people and adults who are incarcerated. The Mural Arts Program also offers special initiatives. Two years ago, a special program called Healing Walls was created. Here, victims of crime work on murals with inmate artists at Graterford Prison. And just this last year, Mural Arts started working at the Youth Study Center and St. Gabriel's Hall, a detention center for young offenders run by the Christian Brothers. Here, Mural Arts runs weekly programs and challenges the young people to give back to their communities through the creation of public art."

"We began painting murals, three-story murals, throughout different neighborhoods. I was able to experience the power of art. I saw the impact, not only on individual young people, but also on neighborhoods," Golden said in her address. "Here in areas where the only visible city workers were the police, we began to deliver public art as a city service. The murals we created were often the only signs of hope on a decaying block or a crime-ridden street."

Viljoen Selected as New Museum Director

Madeleine Viljoen, Ph.D., was named Director of the University's Art Museum this past summer, following the retirement of Brother Daniel Burke, Ph.D., F.S.C., the museum's founding director. Viljoen joined the museum as Assistant Director in January 2005.

The daughter of South African diplomats, she was born in Pretoria, but lived in London, Glasgow, Hamburg, and Athens. She returned to South Africa to attend Cape Town University, where she graduated cum laude with degrees in English and Art History. In 1991, Viljoen moved to the United States, interning at the Metropolitan Museum of Art and at Sotheby's in New York. In 1992, she began graduate school at Princeton University, where she earned her M.A. in 1995 and Ph.D. in 2000 on the topic of Renaissance print-making in the 16th century.

While finishing her doctorate, Viljoen was a fellow from 1999 to 2001 in the Department of Prints, Drawings, and Photographs at the Philadelphia Museum of Art, where she worked on the recent Salvador Dalí retrospective. In 2002, she was a visiting scholar at the American Academy in Rome, and in 2003, she lectured at the University of North Carolina in Chapel Hill. While there, she organized an exhibition with students at the Ackland Art Museum. She has published in a number of academic journals, including Print Quarterly and the Memoirs of the American Academy in Rome, and is currently guest curator for an exhibition of old master prints. The show, entitled The Early Modern Painter-Etcher, opens at the Arthur Ross Gallery at the University of Pennsylvania.

English Professor Allen Honored With Distinguished Faculty Service Award

Marjorie Allen, Ph.D., realized early on in her career that she was cut out to be a teacher.

"I went to a graduate school that was very research-oriented," said Allen, who earned her doctorate at Princeton University and is a Professor of English at La Salle. "One of the things I decided when I was there was that I loved spending time more with people than with libraries. Oh, I love libraries too, but I wanted to spend most of my time working with kids," she said.

She recently received La Salle's Distinguished Faculty Service Award, primarily for her work in the University's Academic Discovery Program (A.D.P.), which counsels students who have the potential to succeed in college but do not meet the University's regular entrance requirements

"I find it extremely challenging and exciting work, because these kids are smart, they enjoy being challenged, and they do well at La Salle," Allen said. "It's incredibly satisfying and one of the joys of my life."

Robert Meidel, Director of the A.D.P., said, "She is the core of the English component. She works really, really hard."

Allen teaches a seven-week intensive course for A.D.P. each summer.

Among Allen's other accomplishments at La Salle, she is a co-founder of the Leadership and Global Understanding minor with Robert Vogel, Ph.D., a professor of elementary and secondary education at the University, and Louise Giugliano, Associate Director of University Ministry and Service at La Salle.

English Professor Marjorie Allen, Ph.D., and La Salle Provost Richard Nigro

Commitments to Teaching and Service Earn Smith Leadership Award

Michael Smith, Ph.D.

While in graduate school, Michael Smith, Ph.D., discovered that having students do public relations work for nonprofit groups turned out to be an invaluable experience for all parties. He also found that he was in love with teaching, and it was this combination of education and service that led to him being named the Distinguished Lasallian Leadership Award recipient this year at La Salle University.

"This approach to learning shows students how to give back to a broader community after they graduate," said Smith. "I am humbled by the Distinguished Lasallian Leadership Award. I accepted it on behalf of all the community organizations that have allowed my students and me to learn from them. The award is a celebration of La Salle University's commitment to community."

In presenting the award to Smith, La Salle's President, Brother Michael McGinniss, F.S.C., Ph.D., '70, said, "In 12 years on campus, he willingly has made sacrifices to help this community demonstrate its Lasallian heritage. (He) has established himself as one of the University's most popular yet demanding teachers. The fact that he sees teaching as both a great gift and a great responsibility is evident even to the casual observer."

Smith hopes his students will understand they can make a difference by accomplishing three goals: "I want them to learn about public relations efforts first-hand, gain an appreciation of professional skills, and achieve the Christian Brothers' mission at La Salle, 'to serve the poor,'" said Smith. "When students achieve these goals, good things will come."

Social Work Program Fully Reaccredited

La Salle's Social Work program has been fully reaccredited by the Council on Social Work Education (CSWE). The news was the culmination of three years of intense review and evaluation of every aspect of the program's mission, curriculum, and outcomes.

"We felt confident going into the process of renewing our accreditation, but it's a long and difficult job, and the accrediting body really called us to task," said Janine Mariscotti, Chair of the Department of Sociology, Social Work, and Criminal Justice. "The news that we had earned reaccreditation was something to celebrate."

During the process of reaccreditation, which began in earnest in 2002, members of the department met weekly to discuss and revise the program's mission and goals and prepare a self-study to submit to CSWE. The faculty used the opportunity to take another look at what they were teaching and whether students were being well-prepared for careers in social work, Mariscotti said. The curriculum was revised to ensure that the program's graduates would have knowledge and skills applicable to diverse populations in the urban community.

Mariscotti said students will reap the benefits of the reaccreditation. Their Bachelor of Social Work degrees are in higher demand than Bachelor of Arts degrees in other fields when it comes to looking for jobs, and B.S.W. graduates from accredited institutions often can complete their master's degrees in just one year, because they don't need to complete prerequisite courses.

Reaccreditation also validates the work the department put into improving the program for its students and the communities they will serve as social workers.

"When you know the program is working well and you have evidence of that, and then have your peers evaluate you and say you're doing a good job, there's just no better feeling," Mariscotti said. "That's as good as it gets."

Br. Robert Kinzler, '77, Named UMAS Director

While an undergraduate student, Brother Robert Kinzler, F.S.C., '77, made the decision to join the order of the Christian Brothers "and I've never regretted it! It's been an exciting and fulfilling life,"

Brother Robert Kinzler, F.S.C., '77

he said. Br. Robert has served as a teacher, counselor, and administrator of a juvenile justice system. This past summer, he was appointed Director of the Office of University Ministry and Service (UMAS), following the passing of Brother Charles

"Chip" Echelmeier, F.S.C.

Several friends and other Brothers suggested he apply for the UMAS position.

"The primary goal of University Ministry and Service is to be seen as a welcoming place for all students, regardless of religious background," he said. "La Salle is Catholic and stands in the Lasallian tradition; these are our primary values, the values that make us who we are, but in no way do we want students of other faiths to feel they're not part of the community. Not all our students are Catholic, and it is very much a part of being Lasallian to help young people nourish their faith, whatever their faith happens to be. I hope University Ministry and Service will help students explore and deepen their faith."

Most recently, Br. Robert had been a community member and part-time staff member at the Christian Brothers Spiritual Center in Philadelphia, a place for young people to explore their faith.

Br. Robert earned a bachelor's degree in science education from La Salle. He later earned master's degrees in social work and education and is currently pursuing a doctorate in education at Temple University.

New Campus Minister Announced

Father James T. Dever, OSFS, was appointed as the University's Campus Minister this summer, succeeding Father David Beebe, who retired.

For the past six years, Fr. Jim had been pastor of Our Mother of Consolation Parish in Philadelphia's Chestnut Hill section. From 1996 to 1999, he had been Chaplain at the College of New Jersey in Ewing, N.J., and Chair of the combined council of campus ministries at the University.

"I like the energy of a college campus," he said. "There's a refreshing and invigorating quality to being around students."

Father James T. Dever, OSFS

Since the students at La Salle represent various geographical areas, it is exciting to watch them interact with each other, and through that interaction, grow into competent adults."

The Campus Ministry is part of University Ministry and Service, and Fr. Jim sees a strong correlation between both offices: "Spirituality leads to service, and service leads to spirituality," he said.

In addition to being a parish pastor, Fr. Jim has been a youth minister in Cinnaminson, N.J., chaplain of a medical center in Camden, N.J., and a teacher at Northeast Catholic High School in Philadelphia. He was ordained a priest after studying with the Oblates of St. Francis de Sales. He graduated from DeSales University with a degree in English and obtained a master's in English from Villanova University. In the 1970s, he earned a certificate in graduate religion at La Salle.

Hispanic Institute Founded at La Salle

La Salle University has established an Hispanic Institute to house existing programs that deal with Spanish language and culture and to develop new programs to serve the growing Hispanic population in the region and the nation.

"We created this to serve a changing demographic world," said Luis Gomez, Ph.D., Director of the Hispanic Institute. "We looked at the situation from both a global perspective and close to home as it relates to demographic changes. There are 14,000 E.S.L. (English as a Second Language) students in the Philadelphia Public School System, and Hispanics are currently 14 percent of the U.S. population. That will become 25 percent of the country's population in 25 years."

HISPANIC INSTITUTE AT LA SALLE UNIVERSITY

And soon the Hispanic population will have disposable income worth $1 trillion dollars, so businesses and services need to have the skills to reach that market, Gomez added.

Some programs currently being offered at La Salle are to help professionals meet government requirements or reach out to the Spanish-speaking community.

The University offers a master's degree in Bilingual/Bicultural Studies, which is designed for professionals, such as doctors, nurses, law enforcement officers, and social workers who work with a Spanish-speaking population.

There is a certificate program for teachers who want to become certified to teach E.S.L. in Pennsylvania and a graduate-level certificate in Translation: English/Spanish-Spanish/English.

SIFE Team Wins Again

For the third consecutive year, La Salle's Students In Free Enterprise (SIFE) team emerged victorious from the SIFE U.S.A. Regional Competition in Boston in April. The team bested teams from 18 other colleges to bring home top honors.

The team went on to place in the top 100 among four-year colleges at the SIFE U.S.A. National Free Market Economics Competition in Kansas City, Mo., in May.

SIFE teams create economic opportunities by organizing outreach projects that teach market economics, entrepreneurship, personal financial success skills, and business ethics. In competitions, their projects are judged on creativity, innovation, and effectiveness.

During the 2004-05 academic year, La Salle's SIFE team organized 10 projects, including one that sent team members to the Hill-Freedman Middle School in Philadelphia's Germantown neighborhood to teach students there about the stock market.

"These young kids were extremely receptive and were able to apply the material we taught when buying the stocks," said Dan Lawson, a SIFE team member and senior marketing and management major from Chester Springs, Pa. "I believe we really made an impact on them, and hopefully, they will be able to use what they learned in the stock market game later in life when they decide to invest in real stocks."

DIPLOMAT IN RESIDENCE AND ART MUSEUM BRING MONKS TO CAMPUS

Tibetan monks from the Drepung Gomang Monastery in India visited La Salle in September for a series of events hosted by the Diplomat-in-Residence program and the University's Art Museum. In addition to several lectures and seminars and a musical performance, the monks created a mandala, or three-dimensional sand painting, made by painstakingly sprinkling colored sand. It took several days to create and was on view in the Art Museum. According to ritual, it was then disassembled, and the sand was poured in a small creek by the University's Japanese Tea House.

Doug Overton, '91, Named Sixers Director of Player Development

PHILADELPHIA 76ERS PRESIDENT BILLY KING ANNOUNCED in August that the team hired Doug Overton, '91, as the Director of Player Development.

A native of Philadelphia and former Sixer, Overton will focus on off-court player development. Overton will be on hand to assist the 76ers' coaching and scouting staffs throughout the season, and he will be involved with numerous community outreach efforts on behalf of the team, including 76ers Basketball 101, a series of basketball clinics throughout the Delaware Valley, according to a news release.

Overton played for the Sixers for more than two years, from 1996 to 1999. An 11-year NBA veteran point guard, Overton averaged 4.5 points, 2.1 assists, and 1.3 rebounds in 499 career games. He most recently played for the Los Angeles Clippers during the 2003-04 season, when he averaged 3.9 points, 2.4 assists, and 1.4 rebounds in 55 games.

Originally drafted in the second round (40th overall) by the Detroit Pistons in the 1991 NBA Draft, Overton spent his first three seasons in Washington and also played for Denver, Philadelphia, Orlando, New Jersey, Boston, Charlotte Hornets, and the Clippers.

La Salle's Director of Intercollegiate Athletics and Recreation Thomas Brennan, Ed.D. (left), talks with Doug Overton, '91, at the last President's Cup Golf Tournament.

Overton starred at Dobbins Tech (Philadelphia) in high school and played for four years at La Salle University from 1987 to 1991. During his collegiate career, Overton scored 1,795 career points and currently holds records for assists (671) and steals (277). He led the Explorers to three consecutive NCAA tournament appearances and, during his senior season (1990-91), averaged 22.3 points, 4.2 assists, and 4.1 rebounds, the Sixers said in their statement.

Explorer Steven Smith Named to Wooden Award Preseason Top 50

AFTER TALLYING THE Ballots of the national Preseason Selection Committee, the John R. Wooden Award has announced the top 50 preseason candidates for the Men's 2005-06 Wooden Award All-American Team. La Salle University's Steven Smith was among four players chosen from the Atlantic 10.

The list is composed of 50 student athletes who, based on last year's individual performance and team records, are the early frontrunners for college basketball's most coveted trophy.

"These preseason selections represent the elite of college basketball, and our entire team at the Wooden Award is excited to see the best players in the nation prove their case as college basketball's player of the year," said Duke Llewellyn, Wooden Award chair. The final selection is made in March.

La Salle's Steven Smith (Philadelphia, Pa./Northeast) was one of the 50 candidates named to the list. Smith was named the Atlantic 10 Co-Player of the Year for the 2004-05 season, in which he led the conference in scoring with 20.3 points per game and was third in the conference in rebounding with 8.5 boards per game. He tallied 10 double-doubles and scored in double figures 14 times. He was also named Honorable Mention All-America by the Associated Press.

Smith was also named to the Atlantic 10 All-Rookie team in 2003 and was one of the favorites to be named A-10 Rookie of the Year before he broke his foot and missed the final 10 games of the season. He was named third-team Atlantic 10 in the 2003-04 campaign.

He finished his junior season with 1,389 career points which places him 20th among Explorers scorers all-time. And now that he has returned for a final season, he could project to finish close to the school's top five all-time scorers and could be the seventh Explorer to score 2,000 or more points.

Brabham, '04, Crowned Miss Pennsylvania

BRENDA BRABHAM, '04, NEVER SET OUT TO BECOME a beauty queen. But, as it happens, she's a natural. In her first-ever pageant, she sashayed away with the title of Miss Pennsylvania. On her second try, she landed in the top 10 in the Miss USA competition, held on April 11 in Baltimore.

"I've been modeling for quite a while, but I never quite thought of getting into pageants to model," said Brabham, who celebrated her 24th birthday on the day of the Miss USA pageant. "Entering the Miss Pennsylvania pageant was a spur-of-the-moment idea, but I thought I had a great shot at succeeding."

Brabham's background in modeling gave her the experience, confidence, and poise needed to succeed in pageants. One of the prizes for winning the state title was full preparation for Miss USA, including sessions with a personal trainer, a media consultant, and a fashion stylist. She designed her own gown for the state competition, and worked with a New York designer to create an evening gown for Miss USA.

She also spent about three weeks before the pageant in Maryland with the contestants from the other 49 states and the District of Columbia. They visited historical sites in and around Baltimore, took a trip to the beach, attended an Orioles game, made appearances at malls and restaurants, and rehearsed extensively for the televised pageant. The highlight for Brabham, though, was a tour of a Cover Girl cosmetics factory.

"They let 51 beauty queens loose in Cover Girl and we were able to pick out whatever we wanted," she said. "We walked away with bags full of products. That was a memorable experience."

Brabham's ultimate goal when she entered her first pageant was to make it to Miss Universe, the international competition that follows Miss USA. Brabham said she walked off the stage after being eliminated from Miss USA with her head held high, but she still felt a keen sense of disappointment.

"I was in complete shock when my name wasn't called for the top five. I honestly thought I was going to win," she said. "Backstage, morale was down among the other contestants, too. Everyone wanted to win and have a chance to make it to the next step."

Brabham, who lives in Germantown, will be Miss Pennsylvania until November, a job that includes appearances and fundraising for her chosen cause, which is breast and ovarian cancer awareness. She has also worked with the Boys and Girls Club while continuing to model full time.

After giving up her Miss Pennsylvania crown, Brabham said she'd like to pursue what she set out to do through pageants—an international modeling career. Down the road, she hopes to use her La Salle marketing degree to create a mentoring program for young girls in her community.

"I want these girls to have someone to talk to and role models to look up to," Brabham said. "I would love to teach them to find whatever it is they truly love to do, and go after it."

1968 COL [Ret] Sylvester (Tony) Ryan (B.A.) of Chantilly, Va., was awarded the Superior Honor Medal by the Department of State for his work as the United States leader on the U.S.-United Kingdom joint team that confirmed that Libya had fulfilled its commitment to rid itself of chemical weapons.

JOHN CHRISTOPHER KLEIS, PH.D.

John Christopher Kleis, Ph.D., retired associate professor of English at La Salle University, died of complications due to cancer on May 28, 2005.

Born in 1937 in Ann Arbor, Mich., he attended the Hill School in Pottstown, Pa., and earned bachelor's and master's degrees from the University of Michigan and a doctorate in English from the University of Pennsylvania, where he specialized in Victorian literature. He joined La Salle's faculty in 1965 and retired after 30 years in 1995. He also served for a number of years as editor of Four Quarters, the internationally acclaimed literary magazine once published at La Salle.

Kevin J. Harty, Chair of La Salle's Department of English, commented, "John Christopher Kleis was a good colleague and an even better friend. His kindness and generosity to his students and his colleagues were without parallel. He knew more about literature, opera, and drama than anyone I have ever known."

John is survived by his companion and partner of more than 30 years, the New York actor Russell Leib, and by his sister, Kendall Kleis of Arizona. A memorial service attended by friends, faculty, former students, and family members was held at La Salle on September 18.

1973 Thomas Giannattasio (B.S.) of Warren, Pa., on July 9, 2005.

Arthur E. Gussman (B.S.) of Philadelphia, Pa., on Dec. 13, 2004.

Reflections on the First Half-Century of the School of Business

50th Anniversary: School of Business

Paul R. Brazina, Interim Dean, School of Business

The Oct. 5, 1955, issue of the La Salle Collegian had the following headline: "College Revamped with Liberal Arts, Business Administration Schools." While education in business has been going on at La Salle University since its inception in 1863, it was in the fall of 1955 that a School of Business Administration was formed. The formation of a business school was a significant decision, not only for business education, but also for the overall direction and future of what was then La Salle College.

In 1953, the Middle States review team spoke to what appeared to be an inner conflict at the College. It posed the following question to the College: "... is the desire to retain the identity and objectives of a college of liberal arts with the business program as an area (or department) comparable with literature, languages, or other such subjects; (or)... is the desire of the College to meet the great demand for highly specialized business curricula and still remain a college of liberal arts devoted to liberal, Catholic, education?" The College answered this question by forming the School of Business Administration in 1955. This decision has led to the type of institution La Salle University is today—a comprehensive university based on a foundation of liberal learning.

Twenty years after the establishment of the S.B.A., business programs at La Salle were once again at the heart of a decision that would change the face of the University. In the mid-1970s, La Salle was primarily an undergraduate-only institution with a small graduate religion program. The formation of the M.B.A. Program in 1976 paved the way for the development of other graduate programs, which eventually led to the naming of La Salle as a university in the mid-1980s.

In the business school, we are proud to have been such a key player in the overall development of the current University.

A strong faculty, successful graduates, along with a growing reputation in graduate and undergraduate education, enables La Salle University and the School of Business to achieve its third major milestone in the past half-century—the prestigious AACSB International accreditation in 1995. Only about 15 percent to 20 percent of business schools worldwide have this recognition of quality.

While significant milestones have been achieved in the business school, we are most proud of the fact that throughout these past 50 years we have provided an education that can be called Lasallian. In addition to preparing students for their chosen paths in life, we also embrace our responsibility to educate and develop the total person—mind, body, and spirit. It is certainly our hope and expectation that the graduates of our business programs leave La Salle with the knowledge that just being prepared for business careers is not enough. Because of the opportunities given to them through education, they have a wider responsibility to their fellow human beings.

Our business school will continue into the future to do what it has always done, and that is focusing on our core strength of teaching and learning. Today, even more attention is being given to experiential learning, and our new Business Scholars Co-op program bears witness to this. Our strong emphasis on international experiences for students will continue to grow, and we look toward improving even further teaching and learning through creative uses of technology.

In the School of Business, we will continue to stay close to our stakeholders, especially in business, to ensure that both our faculty and students are always at the leading edge of thinking.

Reflections on the First Half-Century of the School of Business

For 50 years, La Salle's School of Business has been preparing students for the challenges and opportunities that await them beyond the classrooms of College Hall. As the business world has changed rapidly with the expansion of the global marketplace and the introduction of new technologies, the School of Business has also evolved to offer students the skills and knowledge they need to succeed in an ever-more competitive market; however, through the changes in business, technology, and society of the past 50 years, La Salle's business faculty have continued to be committed to teaching their students the core values of honesty, hard work, and compassion that are the hallmarks of a successful business leader. In the following pages, six alumni, one from each decade of the School of Business, reflect on their experiences at La Salle, and offer their perspectives on keys to success.

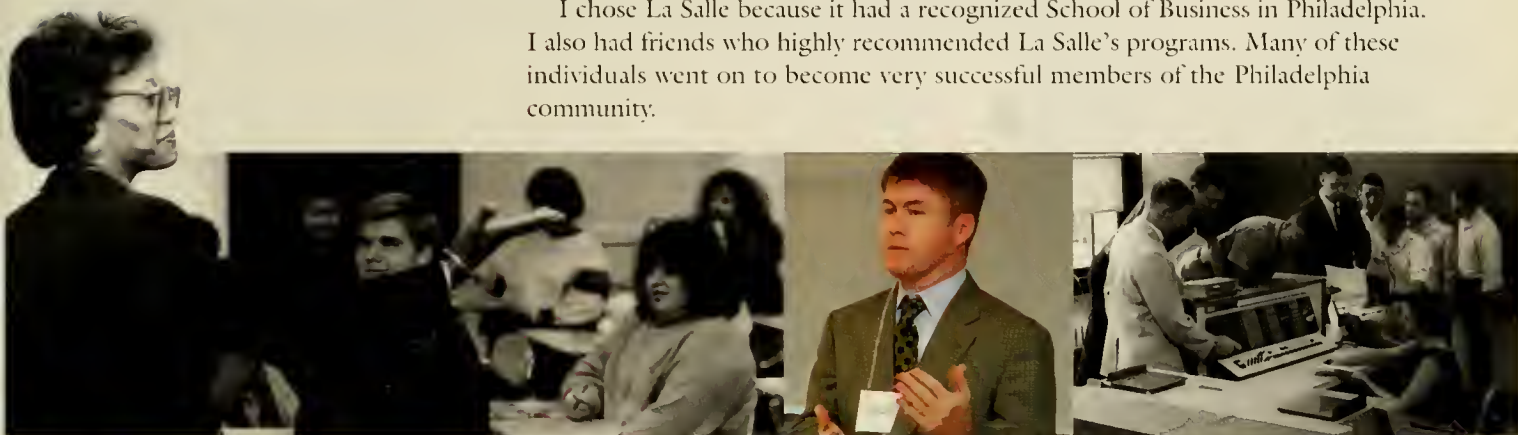

Milton A. Washington, '58

Milton A. Washington has been President of the Allegheny Housing Rehabilitation Corporation (AHRCO) since 1973. AHRCO plans, rehabilitates, constructs, and manages affordable housing for low- to moderate-income families in the Pittsburgh area. He is also the founder and President of Beacon Construction Company. Raised in Philadelphia, Washington graduated from La Salle with a degree in business administration and industrial relations. Washington and his wife, Nancy, a psychologist, have two grown daughters and four grandchildren.

WHY DID YOU CHOOSE LA SALLE FOR YOUR EDUCATION?

I chose La Salle because it had a recognized School of Business in Philadelphia. I also had friends who highly recommended La Salle's programs. Many of these individuals went on to become very successful members of the Philadelphia community.

“You must surround yourself with good people who give you good information because, at the end of the day, you are only as good as the people around you.”

—Milton Washington

IN WHAT WAYS DID LA SALLE PREPARE YOU FOR YOUR CAREER?

La Salle gave me a well-balanced background of basic business skills and a strong foundation of business practice and ethics. Industrial relations and logic helped my career significantly. Logic provided a thought process to navigate through difficult waters and make proper business decisions.

IS THERE A PARTICULAR LA SALLE PROFESSOR (OR TWO) WHO HAS HAD A SIGNIFICANT IMPACT ON YOUR LIFE?

Charles Halpin, head of the Industrial Relations Department, had a total grasp of the subject material. He was able to personalize the subject and convey the material to students in an interesting manner. Halpin was also a person who could discuss other related matters with the same knowledge and intensity.

WHAT QUALITIES ARE IMPORTANT IN A STRONG BUSINESS LEADER?

Strong business leaders must be concise, fair, and honest in their decision-making process. Hard decisions that ultimately affect your organization's direction and longevity must be made to protect your shareholders, clients, and employees. You should have the entrepreneurial spirit and the willingness to diversify and take risks when necessary. You must surround yourself with good people who give you good information because, at the end of the day, you are only as good as the people around you.

WHAT COMMUNITY SERVICE INVOLVEMENTS ARE YOU MOST PROUD OF?

The YMCA has become a tradition in our family. I was a member of the Metropolitan Board of Directors of the YMCA of Pittsburgh for many years. My father, Milton H. Washington, was the Executive Director of the Christian Street Y. Now, my daughter Lara is on the YMCA Board of Pittsburgh. My wife, Nancy Duckrey Washington, and I have also set up a multi-year charitable donation to the YMCA of Pittsburgh.

Anthony J. Nocella, '66

Anthony J. Nocella has enjoyed a long career in banking since his graduation from La Salle with a bachelor's degree in accounting. He is currently President and Chief Executive Officer of Franklin Bank Corp. and Chairman, Chief Executive Officer, and President of Franklin Bank, SSB. Nocella, a C.P.A., has been a director of Franklin Bank Corp. since 2002. Among numerous leadership roles in the banking industry, he served as co-founder, Vice Chairman, and director of Bank United Corp. and was Chief Financial Officer of Bank United from its inception in 1988 until its merger with Washington Mutual in 2001. Nocella holds an M.B.A. from Temple University and completed the Graduate Bank Financial Management Program of the Wharton School at the University of Pennsylvania. He and his wife, Ruth, live in Houston, Texas, and have three children and three grandchildren.

"Work harder than anyone else but work smarter and love whatever you do."
—Anthony Nocella

Although the School of Business was officially founded in 1955, business diplomas have been handed out at La Salle commencements since 1871 (La Salle's fourth such ceremony). In that year, four students received what was then called a commercial diploma.

IN WHAT WAYS DID LA SALLE PREPARE YOU FOR YOUR CAREER?

La Salle fostered my career by giving me a strong set of principles, a moral compass, and a strong technical background in finance and accounting, which enabled me to pass the C.P.A. exam before I graduated. While at La Salle, I had the opportunity to meet a diversified group of people who came from various walks of life, most of whom were veterans working to support their families.

IS THERE A PARTICULAR LA SALLE PROFESSOR (OR TWO) WHO HAS HAD A SIGNIFICANT IMPACT ON YOUR LIFE?

Accounting Professors Joe Markmann and Mike DeAngelis were both mentors to me and helped me get ready for the real world.

WHAT QUALITIES ARE IMPORTANT IN A STRONG BUSINESS LEADER?

Integrity, strong communication skills, and smarts. Business leaders create leaders and a good, positive environment for families to flourish.

HOW WOULD YOU DESCRIBE YOUR LEADERSHIP STYLE?

Attempt to allow creativity among an organization, build consensus among employees, and micromanage only to the extent that it helps an individual develop his or her own leadership skills.

WHAT ADVICE WOULD YOU GIVE TO PEOPLE WHO ARE JUST ENTERING THE BUSINESS WORLD?

Work harder than anyone else but work smarter and love whatever you do.

WHAT COMMUNITY SERVICE INVOLVEMENTS ARE YOU MOST PROUD OF?

The construction of Magee Rehabilitation Hospital in Philadelphia, Pa. Magee treats patients with spinal cord injuries and stroke and trauma victims. The Metropolitan Career Center of Germantown was one of the founding members and helped fund the organization.

IN WHAT WAYS DID LA SALLE PREPARE YOU FOR PERSONAL CHALLENGES YOU HAVE FACED IN YOUR LIFE?

The education, ethics, and integrity taught and practiced by La Salle are key to any successful career. Liberal arts taught me to relate to people of all walks of life.

Thomas J. Fitzpatrick, '72, M.B.A. '81

Thomas "Tim" J. Fitzpatrick has been Chief Executive Officer of SLM Corporation, commonly known as Sallie Mae, the nation's No. 1 paying-for-college company, since June 2005. He served as President and Chief Operating Officer from 2000 to 2005. Prior to joining Sallie Mae, Fitzpatrick was President and Chief Executive Officer of Equity One Inc. Fitzpatrick graduated from La Salle with a bachelor's degree in business in 1972 and earned his M.B.A. from the University in 1981. He also completed Harvard Business School's Advanced Management Program in 1983.

In the 1902-03 course catalog, a semester's tuition in the Commercial Department was $25, along with $5 typewriter and gymnasium fees.

WHY DID YOU CHOOSE LA SALLE FOR YOUR EDUCATION?

I actually was headed to St. Joseph's for a campus visit and was diverted on my train ride down to a fraternity house that was an inter-collegiate fraternity for a host of schools in Philadelphia, including La Salle University. I met a number of students and had so much fun at the party that I was swayed to apply to La Salle.

IN WHAT WAYS DID LA SALLE PREPARE YOU FOR YOUR CAREER?

My La Salle education was instrumental in defining character traits that continue to serve me today: accountability, respect, healthy competition, trustworthiness, and ethical behavior. The energy level reflected in many of the teachers was quite contagious. The small class environment and one-on-one conversations proved to be invaluable.

"Set a personal bar of excellence, re-evaluate the bar, and do not be afraid to raise it regularly."
—Tim Fitzpatrick

Since 1995, La Salle's School of Business has been given the prestigious AACSB International accreditation. Only 15 percent to 20 percent of business schools worldwide have this recognition.

IS THERE A PARTICULAR LA SALLE PROFESSOR (OR TWO) WHO HAS HAD A SIGNIFICANT IMPACT ON YOUR LIFE?

I have characterized four professors to be the "Four Horsemen of La Salle":

- (1) Jack Reardon (Accounting)—full of energy, quite engaging, and encouraged participation.
- (2) John Grady (Economics)—scared you to death, never smiled, and a great teacher.
- (3) Pete Sweeney (Cost Accounting)—"Sneaky Pete." You'd better be prepared walking into his class—you never knew when he'd be tapping you on your shoulder from behind.
- (4) Joseph Kane—a very pleasant disposition, mild-mannered, yet beneath that soft surface, one tough professor—and one of the toughest graders.

All in all, these four professors, along with a host of others who were equally worthy, all helped shape an education environment that was extraordinary for a young man.

WHAT ADVICE WOULD YOU GIVE TO PEOPLE WHO ARE JUST ENTERING THE BUSINESS WORLD?

If you stay true to your goals—work harder and smarter than the competition—success will follow. Set a personal bar of excellence, re-evaluate the bar, and do not be afraid to raise it regularly. The business world is very serious. Recognize you will be in it for the next 30 or so years. Remind yourself daily: "Don't take yourself too seriously."

Ralph J. Mauro, Esq., '84

Ralph J. Mauro is a partner in the Business and Finance Group of Kleinbard Bell & Brecker LLP, where he has worked as a business lawyer for the past 13 years. He graduated from La Salle with a degree in accounting and worked as a C.P.A. for Arthur Andersen's Audit Division for three years before becoming an attorney. Mauro has stayed involved with La Salle by serving on the Council of President's Advisors and the School of Business Advisory Board and participating in several School of Business programs, including Executives on Campus and Banker's Day. Mauro lives in Huntingdon Valley, Pa., with his wife, Linda, and their three children.

WHY DID YOU CHOOSE LA SALLE FOR YOUR EDUCATION?

As a graduate from Archbishop Ryan coming from a family of limited means, I knew that I would have to commute to college, so I applied to and was fortunate enough to be accepted at several of the local colleges and universities. Fortunately, I was able to compete for and receive a four-year Christian Brothers' Scholarship, for which I still feel indebted to La Salle.

IN WHAT WAYS DID LA SALLE PREPARE YOU FOR YOUR CAREER?

With its rigorous, practically oriented curriculum, La Salle's accounting program had a reputation for graduating hard-working, top-notch students, and my graduating class was no different. Many of us already had full-time employment offers from Big 8 accounting firms by December of our senior year. From day one, I was able to hit the ground running, as were all of my other classmates who joined me at Andersen.

WHAT QUALITIES ARE IMPORTANT IN A STRONG BUSINESS LEADER?

In my experience, successful leaders all seem to possess an ability to motivate others to perform at higher levels. Some important qualities these leaders share are a determination to do the right thing, a willingness to share successes with those around them, and an ability to accept responsibility when things don't go right.

HOW WOULD YOU DESCRIBE YOUR LEADERSHIP STYLE?

I have never been much of a "rah-rah" type person, one who leads by preaching. Rather, I consider myself to be a team player, and so I believe strongly in leading by example. That doesn't mean that tasks shouldn't be delegated to appropriate levels on the team; it means that I am willing to do my part to ensure team success.

WHAT COMMUNITY SERVICE INVOLVEMENTS ARE YOU MOST PROUD OF?

I am proud to serve on the Board of Directors of two nonprofit organizations in Philadelphia that do great work. One is the Dawn Staley Foundation, which offers after-school educational, health, and athletic programs to inner-city girls in North Philadelphia. The other is The Enterprise Center, a West Philadelphia organization that operates the Pennsylvania Minority Business Development Center, which connects minority entrepreneurs with technical assistance, high-end consulting, and capital opportunities.

"The biggest obstacle to success is thinking you're above something or being afraid to show you don't know something by not asking questions."
—Susan Barrett

Susan M. Barrett, '94

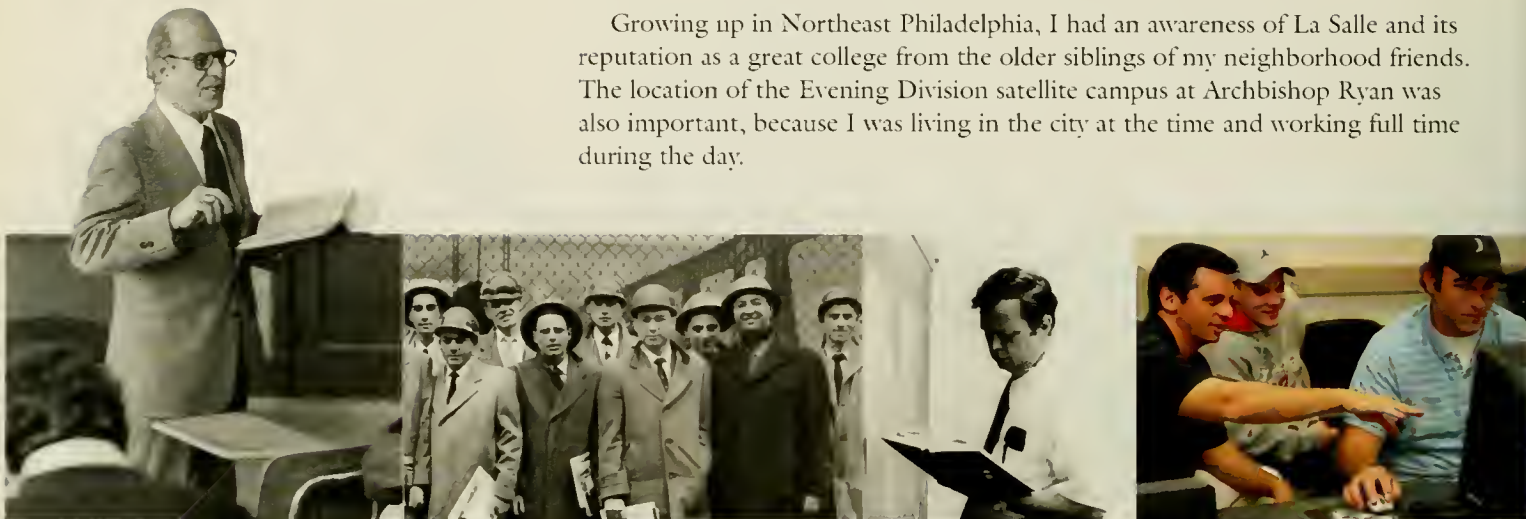

Susan M. Barrett is the President of Dearden, Maguire, Weaver & Barrett, an investment management and consulting firm. She has worked for the company since 1985, beginning as an administrative assistant, while she was studying toward a degree in finance in La Salle's Evening Division. At the firm, she advanced to portfolio manager in about two years, and she went on to become a minority shareholder in 1992, a full partner in 1997, and President in 2005. She also is the co-founder and President of Delancy Capital Group, a minority-owned, Philadelphia-based investment counseling firm that manages assets for large public and private institutions. At La Salle, Barrett has served on the Board of Trustees and the Council of President's Advisors, and she started a scholarship fund in honor of her late father in 2001. She lives in Haddonfield, N.J., with her husband, Russ, and her daughter.

WHY DID YOU CHOOSE LA SALLE FOR YOUR EDUCATION?

Growing up in Northeast Philadelphia, I had an awareness of La Salle and its reputation as a great college from the older siblings of my neighborhood friends. The location of the Evening Division satellite campus at Archbishop Ryan was also important, because I was living in the city at the time and working full time during the day.

IN WHAT WAYS DID LA SALLE PREPARE YOU FOR YOUR CAREER?

Beside the obvious (i.e., my degree in finance), La Salle rounded my edges an awful lot. I was a first generation college girl and had a lot to learn. At La Salle, I met people from all walks of life and learned to look at life through a broader lens, and I think that's helped me deal with clients and colleagues in my career.

IS THERE A PARTICULAR LA SALLE PROFESSOR (OR TWO) WHO HAS HAD A SIGNIFICANT IMPACT ON YOUR LIFE?

Les Barenbaum and Walt Shubert. I did an independent study with them that I will never forget. Also, Jan Ambrose, who taught me Finance 101, really brought finance to a basic level that could be understood by the layman. I always think that's a sign of someone who really knows his or her stuff.

DESCRIBE A DEFINING MOMENT IN YOUR LIFE.

The birth of my daughter, Sarah Elizabeth, and her continuing presence in my life. A true miracle. By the way, I was still an evening student when she was born in 1992. I finished finals on a Wednesday night and went into labor 48 hours later. I was so relieved she waited for those finals to be over.

WHAT ADVICE WOULD YOU GIVE TO PEOPLE WHO ARE JUST ENTERING THE BUSINESS WORLD?

Be willing to do whatever it takes to make it—even if that means taking out the trash, if necessary. The biggest obstacle to success is thinking you're above something or being afraid to show you don't know something by not asking questions.

WHAT COMMUNITY SERVICE INVOLVEMENTS ARE YOU MOST PROUD OF?

Personally, my position as a Trustee at La Salle is amazing to me. I've come a long way since my days as an evening student. Also, I am proud of the work I did as a Girl Scout leader in my hometown of Haddonfield.

Xiaoyan “Cindy” Guo, M.B.A. '04

Cindy Guo came to the United States from Shanghai, China, in 2002 to enroll in La Salle's Full-time M.B.A. program. It took her some time to adjust to the American way of life. Still, she persevered, earning her M.B.A., joining Beta Gamma Sigma Honor Society, and landing a job as an auditor with KPMG as soon as she graduated. Guo, who lives in Ambler, Pa., is a licensed Certified Public Accountant and passed all four C.P.A. exams on the first try within six months of her graduation. She is now a Level II Certified Financial Analyst candidate after passing the Level I exam.

WHY DID YOU CHOOSE LA SALLE FOR YOUR EDUCATION?

I received my undergraduate degree from a university in China and worked in the airline and retail industries for two years before I decided to come to the U.S. My interest in accounting and finance grew rapidly during the two years I was working and I realized that I was not satisfied with my routine. After extensive research and comparison, I decided to study in the U.S. since it had the most sophisticated and developed financial markets in the world. I knew I wanted an accredited school, and a friend recommended me to Elizabeth Scofield, Director of the Full-time M.B.A. program at La Salle. My conversations with her led to my decision to attend La Salle.

HOW DIFFICULT WAS IT TO ADJUST TO LIFE IN THE UNITED STATES?

Adjusting to life in the U.S. was difficult for me. I did not have family or friends in the U.S. I still vividly remember the first day I came to La Salle with four pieces of luggage without a place to stay, or a sense of direction, or a means of transportation; however, I was really lucky and many people helped me. Dimanche Suy, a student from Cambodia, spent many days from the afternoon until the middle of the night teaching me to drive in a parking lot. My first year was an adventure full of tears and laughter and things I had never imagined doing.

IS THERE A PARTICULAR LA SALLE PROFESSOR (OR TWO) WHO HAS HAD A SIGNIFICANT IMPACT ON YOUR LIFE?

When I first came to La Salle and tried to settle down, Elizabeth Scofield and Joe Ugras, now Dean of the College of Professional and Continuing Studies, were of great help. Also, the many professors from various departments, especially accounting and finance, held students to very high standards and were extremely diligent, knowledgeable, and enthusiastic teachers. Honestly, the education I received from La Salle was and will be the most beneficial experience in my life.

WHAT QUALITIES ARE IMPORTANT IN A STRONG BUSINESS LEADER?

It is important to be respectful and helpful to the people whom you work for and with in the business world. Always keep an open mind and be modest, but confident. You must learn how to follow before you learn how to lead, and you must understand before being understood.

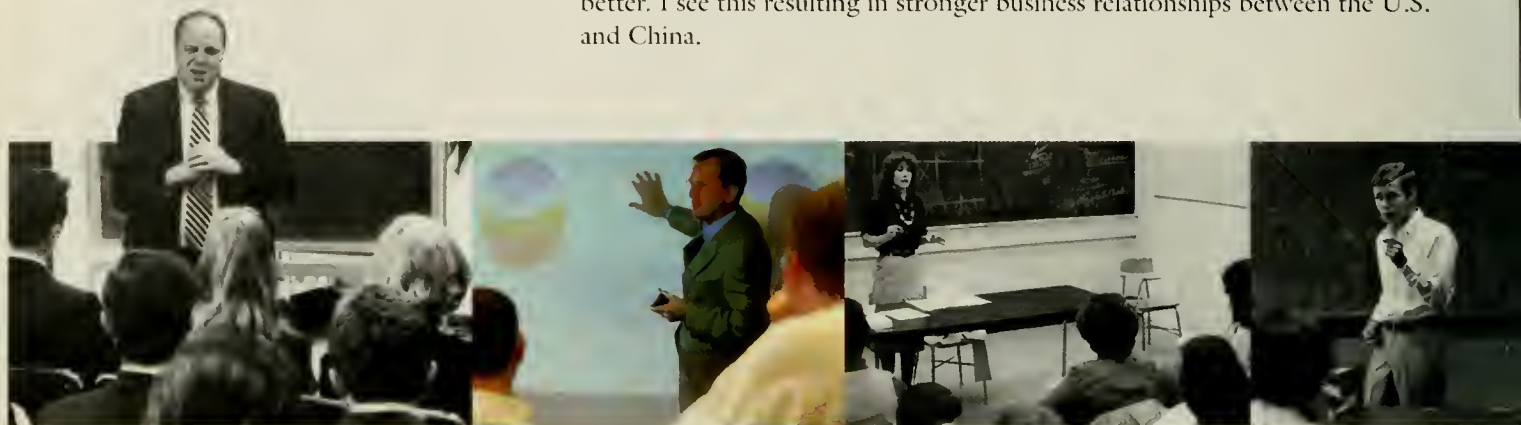

“Honestly, the education I received from La Salle was and will be the most beneficial experience in my life.”

—Cindy Guo

La Salle's first Bachelor of Science in Business Administration may have been bestowed in 1927.

WHAT BUSINESS OR PERSONAL GOALS WOULD YOU LIKE TO ACHIEVE IN THE FUTURE?

With my international background and experience in the U.S. and China, I hope to return to China and do something involving both countries in the future. I am having a wonderful experience in the U.S. and I hope to share this with people in my country and to help people from both countries to understand each other better. I see this resulting in stronger business relationships between the U.S. and China.

J. ANTHONY HAYDEN, '67: WHY I GIVE BACK

LA SALLE
SHOULDER TO SHOULDER
Securing the Future

WHAT INSPIRES J. ANTHONY (TONY) HAYDEN, '67, TO GIVE back to La Salle? It's his belief in the value of a Catholic education, and the University's commitment to providing one to all students, particularly those from economically underprivileged backgrounds—those who might not otherwise have the opportunity to earn a college degree. Hayden, like many of his classmates, benefited tremendously from that commitment, and now he encourages his fellow alumni to help the next generation of young people get their education.

"A lot of kids can't afford to go to Notre Dame, Georgetown, or Boston College," Hayden said. "Because of La Salle's mission, there are a tremendous number of graduates who have been able to have the opportunity to compete with the brightest and best and be as or more successful than the graduates of the Ivy League or other elite schools."

Over the last 37 years, as Hayden built a successful career in the commercial real estate industry, he has always found time for service to La Salle, including currently serving on the Board of Trustees, where he lends his real estate expertise to the University. He established a scholarship fund for La Salle students from Philadelphia-area schools who need financial assistance in order to attend college.

Alumni have a responsibility to do what they can to help their alma mater, according to Hayden.

"All of us have to look within ourselves, and we have to become more generous. If we are to continue this mission, we need all alumni to step up," he said.

But Hayden doesn't give back simply because he's been successful; he believes strongly in the University's tradition of providing its students with the skills and knowledge to thrive in whatever field they ultimately enter.

"La Salle has given people like me and thousands of others the chance to get a degree and compete in our chosen field. The same opportunity that was offered over 140 years ago is still offered today," he says. "That's why I love La Salle—for the opportunity students have to get that Catholic education and go out and make something of themselves."

Shoulder to Shoulder: Securing the Future, La Salle's major gift initiative to provide funds for a new science and technology building and strengthened endowment, continues to draw support from our generous alumni and friends. To date, $17,084,137.60 has been secured in gifts and pledges toward the $25 million goal (from 160 alumni and others).

The Charter Dinner celebrates the founding of La Salle College on March 20, 1863, and pays tribute to the generations of Christian Brothers, laypersons, and clergy whose dedication has made La Salle University the prominent institution that it is today.

Since its founding, La Salle has played a leadership role in Philadelphia as both an educational institution and a responsible corporate citizen. In recognition of the importance of leadership in our community, La Salle University recognizes an individual who has displayed outstanding leadership in the corporate, civic, governmental, or religious communities with the presentation of La Salle University's Leadership Award.

WE ARE VIETNAM VETERANS

BY JOSEPH VOLPE, PH.D.

Joseph Volpe is Assistant Professor of Philosophy at La Salle and a Vietnam veteran. Last semester, he and his honors travel-study class spent 10 days touring Vietnam as part of their "Contesting Narratives: Versions of the Vietnam War" course. What follows is his recollection of the powerful visit—his first trip back since his tour of duty.

THEN, AS A YOUNG MAN, AND IN THE COMPANY OF MANY YOUNG MEN, I saw the country for the first time. It appeared on the left side of the plane peaking through the mists of the rising monsoon—mountainous and menacing and incredibly green. I was sitting at a window seat, and I remember looking down at this place I could not believe I was coming to and feeling hollow.

Now, as a not-so-young man, and in the company of mostly young women, I am returning to that place I first saw 34 years ago. I am not sitting at a window seat this time. I need the aisle now. And I am not feeling hollow, but instead deeply apprehensive and, more unexpectedly, strangely emotional.

Then, it was Cam Ranh Bay that was my entry to Vietnam. Cam Ranh Bay was a sprawling military base, and I remember being struck and surprised by its mass, but mostly by its look of permanence. I don't know what I was expecting, but it wasn't what I saw. This was my very first of many surprises about the war.

Now, I'm returning to Vietnam by way of Hanoi. Then, this would have been unthinkable. But, here I am, in Hanoi, shuffling down one of those glass-enclosed airport walkways, musing about the distance between then and now. As I make my way, I look over my left shoulder and I am brought to a stop. Framing the conspicuously empty tarmac are two hangars that I remember from watching television coverage of the release of the POWs in 1973. For whatever strange reason, my angle of vision seems identical to the angle shot on that day of release so long ago. I stare at the hangars remembering. I feel odd. And it happens. Then becomes now and now, then. A flash of temporal dislocation, but just a flash. Gone as quickly as it comes. I hurry on in this eerily empty airport to claim my baggage and meet up with the students with whom I am traveling.

Then, I traveled often. On the road—north to Bong Son and west to An Khe. By helicopter—west to Pleiku and Kontum and south to Tuy Hoa and Nha Trang. But I did not know the country. My travels were narrow and limiting. I knew only my route, and sometimes even that felt like knowing too much. Those with whom I traveled were often hard and often talked a hard talk.

Now, I'm traveling from Hanoi to Saigon. The route is still narrow but, at least, it's long and with many stops. Those with whom I am traveling, students, are anything but hard, and they don't talk a hard talk, but the talk of joy. Today we are on the central coast of a unified Vietnam, and we are traveling to My Lai, the site of the notorious massacre.

We arrive at the site. Our guide is a young woman, young enough to be one of my students. She begins her narration of the events of March 16, 1968. We are all familiar with the gruesome details of that day, having read a stomach-turning, minute-by-minute account on our 19-hour flight. That we are informed in this way allows us to receive the absolutely compelling and overwhelming emotion of her narration. She tells us that many members of her family were killed here. She becomes angry. She grieves. She implores us to explain how this could happen.

A memorial at the site of the My Lai massacre.

She cannot speak through her tears. She turns her back on us and stamps her foot. She will not look at us. We are overwhelmed with grief and shame. We want to be forgiven. But she will not forgive us. She finishes and walks away and leaves us to wander, with our grief and shame, alone.

This young Vietnamese woman has been too much for me. Her narration has let loose that unexpected emotion with which I began this trip. I find a palm. I sit in its shade. And I cry. I'm not crying for My Lai, not exactly. I'm not exactly sure what I'm crying about, just that it's about everything—then, now; now, then.

Sitting in the shade of the palm, I watch my students. I watch them wander the site. I watch them take on the pain of this place. I watch them support and console one another. And in watching them, I discover I have grown to love them. I love their courage in engaging the risk of this journey of return for me. I love their openness, their receptiveness, their depth. I love their willingness, a generation removed, to accept responsibility for what happened here. What a discovery to make in such a place as this.

We leave My Lai and ride on a bus for many hours, each of us alone with our thoughts. We are traveling south on Highway 1 past the once enormous American base at Chu Lai, past Duc Pho, where my close friend John Baky (Director of La Salle's Connelly Library) served as an M.P., and into Binh Dinh Province.

Binh Dinh Province. Then, this is where I served. I traveled on this highway, armed and wary of danger. Now, I carefully watch the passing scenery and search for familiar sights. We pass Phu Cat. Then, I spent six months there, counting the days until I could go home. Now, I am disappointed that I fail to recognize anything except the general familiarity of the land's topography. Then and now.

We continue traveling south. It has been a long and emotionally tumultuous day. It is dark now, very dark, and we are making our way over mountains just south of Qui Nhon. Then, I first joined my company in these mountains, and I lived in one of these valleys for a time.

Now, we are traveling in the very dark down a switchback road. I swear I've been on this road before. Then, of course, it wouldn't have been paved but, now, this seems all too familiar.

We continue over another mountain and down its backside to a beautiful hotel that sits beautifully on the sea. But something is wrong, at least for me. I'm feeling odd again: then becoming now; now, then.

I try to orient myself spatially, and I discover that we have arrived at the backside of the mountain from which, then, when I lived in the adjacent valley, we were sometimes mortared and shot at. It just can't be. But I'm convinced it is. My Lai to here. It is too much.

We meet in my room to try to bring to words a day that seems to have lasted a lifetime. But as much as we try, we fail. We find ourselves in the grip of an experience too large and too deep to be worded. We are moved by this recognition. And with all due apologies to all those others each of us loves—at this moment, in this place, on this very dark night, bound together by our speechlessness, we are the only people who exist in the world.

Then, I came home tired, unsettled, vaguely despondent, and feeling changed in ways I could neither give shape nor name. But I was fortunate. The need to give shape and name has given me a career, and that career has brought me back again to this place with people I have grown to love. What a gift.

There are lines from a poem by Bill Ehrhart, a friend and veteran, that go, "I only know/you never know what's going to save you." I think I now feel the truth of these very wise lines.

Now, they come home tired, unsettled, vaguely despondent, and feeling changed in ways they can give neither shape nor name. I am stunned by the symmetry of our comings home. Then and now. And I can only hope that they, too, will be fortunate, and that the need to give shape and name will yield to them, too, a gift.

A resort in Qui Nhon.

Making Wishes Come True

One Woman's Personal Epiphany Leads to a Foundation for the Elderly

BY MARIAN MORTON

IN JANUARY 2004, ON THE COLDEST DAY IN DECADES, Cass Forkin, '92, M.B.A., '98, stood in a snowy Philadelphia cemetery and granted an 81-year-old woman's wish: to mark her son's grave with a headstone.

The simple ceremony to dedicate the grave meant a great deal to Margaret Turner, who hadn't been able to afford a headstone when her son died in June 2004. But the event also carried tremendous significance for Forkin, as it was the first wish granted by the Twilight Wish Foundation, the nonprofit organization she founded to bring joy to the elderly.

"I'm a champion of the underserved, and I feel that if you're a senior, you really don't have a voice, and you're forgotten in a lot of ways," Forkin said. "I wanted to do something that would show our appreciation for all they've done for us in our lives."

Since that frigid January day nearly two years ago, Twilight Wish has granted 700 wishes, ranging from cruises and a ride in a blimp over the Atlantic Ocean, to stuffed animals and food items for seniors in nursing homes. The foundation grants the wishes with the help of donations and sponsorships, and Forkin has relied on a large network of volunteers, friends, and other contacts to get her big idea off the ground.

Forkin has a proven record of perseverance. She completed her bachelor's degree in accounting at La Salle (with a 4.0 G.P.A., no less) after 13 years of night courses, and she went on to earn her M.B.A. from La Salle in 1998. She worked in health-care administration for more than 12 years before leaving to focus her attention on Twilight Wish.

The idea for Twilight Wish came to Forkin in an epiphany, albeit one that revealed itself to her over time. She recalls standing on the beach at night several years ago, looking up into the sky and asking God for guidance and a direction for her life.

"Although I had all these accomplishments, I felt there was something more that I was supposed to do," she said.

Her answer did not arrive right away.

Three years ago, she watched three elderly women struggle to pay their lunch bill at a diner in Bucks County. Forkin slipped the waitress $20, hoping to pay for the women's lunch anonymously, but the waitress revealed her identity anyway, and the women hugged Forkin and expressed their tearful gratitude. One of the women said, "We didn't know there were people like you anymore. We thought you had forgotten us." Those words stayed with Forkin.

A few months later, while on a cruise to the Bahamas, she was enjoying a rare moment of relaxation and a head massage when an idea came to her so suddenly that she sat upright in the massage chair and asked the masseuse for a pen and paper. "Nonprofit foundation ... for the elderly with hard lives," she wrote.

Once she had conducted some research and realized that no organization or agency existed to grant wishes for the elderly, she knew she had the answer she had asked for that night on the beach.

"I thought, 'No wonder I'm being given this to do. It's not being done,'" Forkin said. "You can feed people and give them shelter, but they also need things that bring them comfort and joy. Seniors feel like they're not remembered for all that they've done, and that's a shame."

In just under two years, Forkin and Twilight Wish's volunteers and sponsors have fulfilled dreams great and small. Twilight Wish has arranged a ride on the Zamboni before a Philadelphia Flyers game for an avid hockey fan who was celebrating her 75th birthday; sent a Brooklyn, N.Y., woman to Illinois to watch her grandson's graduation from Navy boot camp; and helped an Oregon woman mark her 100th birthday with a ride in the sidecar of a Harley-Davidson motorcycle. The organization has provided Christmas gifts for entire nursing homes, tracked down an Elton John impersonator for a 92nd birthday party, and coordinated pen pals and visits for senior citizens who said their only wish was to have a friend to talk to.

In June 2005, Forkin's group tackled its largest project to date when it threw a Flag Day party for the residents of the Veterans Administration Nursing Home in Philadelphia. More than 240 residents were asked to name one thing that would put a smile on their face, and their requests were touching in their simplicity. Several residents asked for Bibles, and one man for a Thursday-night trip to Penn's Landing to listen to big-band music. There were many requests for food, such as cheesesteaks and sweets, and subscriptions to newspapers and magazines.

A retired mail carrier asked to ride his former mail delivery route in Jenkintown, Pa., a woman about to turn 100 years old asked for a party with decorations on her birthday, and another man asked for a trip to the Poconos with his family. Forkin and her volunteers diligently answered each wish, and many residents' lined faces were streaked with tears as they left the nursing home courtyard after the party.

"True joy brings tears. We make people cry, and we do a lot of crying ourselves," Forkin said.

Forkin's foundation has already started to expand beyond the Pipersville, Pa., office where it is headquartered. After Family Circle magazine profiled Forkin and Twilight Wish last fall, nearly 700 people from all 50 states expressed interest in starting Twilight Wish chapters in their own areas. Since July, the foundation has added chapters in Illinois, Florida, and New Jersey.

Securing the funding and support needed to take the nonprofit's work nationwide is a daunting task, but if Forkin has learned one thing in starting Twilight Wish, it is that if you believe in something strongly enough, you will find a way to make it happen.

"I have high hopes and lots of faith," she said.

For more information about getting involved with Twilight Wish, call 877.TWF.WISH (877.893.9474) or visit www.twilightwish.org. Twilight Wish is funded through individual donations including matching employer programs and the United Way, grants, and corporate sponsorships. The mailing address is P.O. Box 1042, Doylestown, PA 18901. Twilight Wish is a 501c3 charitable nonprofit organization and donations are tax-deductible to the full extent of the law.

SINGER / SONGWRITER ENJOYS SUCCESS WITH TWO ALBUMS

BY ANDREW LAZOR, '06

IN HIS FRESHMAN YEAR AT LA SALLE, BILL RICCHINI, '96, started learning how to play guitar. While many musicians harbor dreams of superstardom or reaching uncharted creative zeniths, Ricchini's initial motivations were much simpler. "I had a nice Nirvana covers set worked out for girls I knew in St. Katherine's," the Philadelphia native joked. "But the girls didn't understand."

Since then, Ricchini has put in the time and energy to expand his vision. His hard work is exemplified in the success he enjoys: Ricchini's second album, Tonight I Burn Brightly, was released on the Transdreamer label this past August. Distributed by Sony, the record has received great reviews from local outlets like the Inquirer and Philadelphia Weekly, and it has made top 10 lists in Rolling Stone, Village Voice, Salon, and Magnet. He also has been on two national tours. Ricchini, who lives in New York City, works as an ad copywriter when he's not making music.

While at La Salle, he studied English and Communication and was a "writing major by most accounts." This experience undoubtedly led to his interest in crafting lyrics, a natural talent that several faculty members recognized and encouraged. Ricchini mentioned that Communication Department Chair Lynne Texter and professor-turned-author Justin Cronin were major influences on his style. "[They] told me I was a good writer, and it gave me a lot of confidence," he said. He still keeps in touch with both. "I spoke with [Cronin] the other day, and he told me he jogs to my new record. I took that as a personal victory."

The singer/songwriter has been drawn to music since childhood. At the age of five, he would sing harmony to an Abbey Road eight-track while riding in his mother's Cutlass Sierra. He would also steal Beach Boys and Mamas and the Papas albums from his relatives. Ricchini's long-standing relationship with music certainly lends to his current success.

Ricchini started by making tapes for friends on a small recorder. After he noticed that people enjoyed his work, he took a grassroots approach in creating Ordinary Time, his independently-recorded debut. Ricchini landed a record deal after the album started circulating through the music press. He also received radio spins on stations like TIBB and WXPB. While the home recording process was difficult, the musician holds the do-it-yourself approach in high regard.

"[It was] a less sterile environment than a studio," said Ricchini, whose chief influences include The Beach Boys, The Zombies, and Bob Dylan. "It gave the songs strength of atmosphere and built-in intimacy."

Burn is a soft, atmospheric album characterized by Ricchini's thoughtful guitar work and impeccably restful lyrics. The tracks feature accompaniment from notable musicians like percussionist Lee Wall and singer/pianist Royston Langdon. Ricchini feels his latest work displays some considerable growth. "Ordinary Time was youthful exuberance," he explained. "Burn is more craft."

"We got such great sounds on Burn that the songs called for more space," he added. "Ordinary Time is sprawling ... it was me learning how to write songs one at a time. [This album] is more about composition and simplicity." Ricchini co-produced the album with Bryce Goggin, who has manned the boards for legendary acts like The Ramones.

Ricchini's graduated progression from cover song crooner to highly regarded musical architect reflects his atypical talents. "Originality comes from processing your influences, and then forgetting them in a way," he said. "I'm trying to say something true, something beautiful. But I also want you to sing along."

Leaders Honored with Signum Fidei, Finley Awards

Monsignor Robert McDermott, founder of the St. Joseph Carpenter Society, which builds and rehabs homes for families in Camden, N.J., received the Signum Fidei Award, given annually by La Salle's Alumni Association to an individual who has made "most noteworthy contributions to the advancement of humanitarian principles in keeping with the Christian Judeo traditions." Signum Fidei is "sign of faith," the motto of the Christian Brothers.

"I think he has done a truly amazing job in not just making a difference in the city of Camden, but in helping people help themselves and make a difference in their own lives," said Mike Diccicco, '71, President of La Salle's Alumni Association. "He has brought not just shelter, but pride of homeownership to people of that community. It's all about giving good people the chance to make their own way. All they need is a chance, and the monsignor has certainly proved that."

Monsignor McDermott is the pastor of St. Joseph's Pro-Cathedral in Camden, and he founded the St. Joseph's Carpenter Society in 1985. To date, the society has built or rehabbed more than 600 homes that have been sold to low- or moderate-income families via mortgages secured with the help of the society. More than 300 people have also graduated from the Society's Money Basics and Homebuyer Education programs.

Frank Stanton, '51, a retired market research executive, received the University's John J. Finley Award, given annually to recognize "alumni who have exhibited outstanding service to La Salle University and/or the Alumni Association."

Stanton is being recognized for his contributions to the Board of Trustees' Enrollment Services Committee. Since 1997, applications are up 80 percent, the size of the freshman class has increased significantly, and transfers applications have grown.

"Frank was an indispensable resource to the entire marketing program of the University at a time when we needed it the most," said Ray Ricci, '67, Vice President for Enrollment Services at La Salle. "Those achievements in enrollment are a result of the leadership, insight and support provided by Frank as committee chair."

Stanton was Chairman and C.E.O. for W.R. Simmons Inc. and the MRB Group Inc. In 1962, during the Kennedy administration, he developed a series of surveys that provided the administration with information needed to persuade Congress to adopt the Nuclear Test-ban Treaty.

NOLTE RECEIVES McNALLY AWARD

The Washington, D.C., Alumni Chapter presented the 2005 John J. McNally Service Award to William M. Nolte, Ph.D., '70, at a reception held at the Watergate Hotel in Washington on October 25, 2005. The award honors people who have made a commitment, in public or private capacities, to serve the National Capital area and is named in honor of the late John J. McNally, '64. As Chancellor of the National Intelligence University System, Nolte coordinates, on behalf of the Director of National Intelligence, the education, training, and related research programs of the U.S. intelligence community. A career National Security Agency Officer, Nolte has served two tours at the National Intelligence Council, serves as a member of the Board of Studies in Intelligence, and is an adjunct member of the faculty at the Joint Military Intelligence College.

Edward Turzanski, '81, La Salle's Assistant Vice President for Government and Community Relations, congratulates William M. Nolte, Ph.D., '70, winner of the second annual McNally Award.

Actor Peter Boyle, '57, Basks in Glow of Shining Star Award

Peter Boyle, '57, whose roles have ranged from the grumpy father on Everybody Loves Raymond to the loveable monster in Young Frankenstein, received the University's Shining Star Award, given by the school's Communication Department.

"The Shining Star Award is given to a professional with an outstanding career in communication and also a record of service to the community, and Peter certainly meets those standards," said Brother Gerry Molyneaux, F.S.C., Ph.D., '58, a La Salle Communication professor and longtime friend of Boyle.

The award was presented at a gala affair on Oct. 29, 2005, at the Pyramid Club in Philadelphia. Proceeds from the function will benefit the La Salle Communication Fund for Excellence, endowing scholarships and advancing the needs of the University's Communication department.

A Philadelphia native, Boyle has appeared in such films as The Candidate, Monster's Ball, and Joe. Boyle won an EMMY™ in 1996 for his special appearance on The X-Files. He received an honorary degree from La Salle in 1993.

Also at the event, La Salle Communication senior

Michelle Bauer received the first Brother Gerry Molyneaux Scholarship.

The scholarship is funded by communication alumni and is named after Br. Gerry, who founded the department.

Lynne Texter, Ph.D., Chair of the department, said Bauer "impressed the scholarship committee with not only her academic excellence and work experience, but also with her motivation, community service, poise, and humility. Michelle is an excellent choice as the first recipient, and she has set a high standard for all future communication majors."

African American Alumni Association Recognizes Philadelphia Newspaper Publisher

Robert W. Bogle, President and C.E.O. of the Philadelphia Tribune, the nation's oldest African American newspaper, received the Warren E. Smith, M.D., '54, Award, presented by La Salle's African American Alumni Association at its annual dinner on Nov. 4, 2005.

During his tenure at the paper, Bogle has re-established the Tribune as one of the best publications in the country. The National Newspaper

Publishing Association, a 65-year-old federation of more than 200 African American community newspapers, has honored the Tribune five times in the last 10 years as the "The Best Newspaper in America."

"Bob Bogle has been and continues to be affiliated with many other civic and social organizations, but he is more than a mere composite of the associations listed in his bio," said Leon Ellerson, '56, who presented Bogle with the award. "He is a compassionate community leader who has spent his entire life serving and contributing to the well-being of all minorities in the area. Mr. Bogle is an embodiment of Lasallian ideals. So he is indeed a worthy recipient of the Warren E. Smith Award that recognizes the character and high principles of a truly caring person to the La Salle community and the Philadelphia region in its entirety."

Also at the function, two students, Donna Payne, '06, and Michael Troi Allen, '06, received the Warren E. Smith, M.D., Scholarship.

Warren E. Smith was one of the first African Americans to graduate from La Salle's pre-med program in 1954. He served as a psychiatrist at La Salle for 15 years until he retired.

From left, Brother Gerry Molyneaux, F.S.C., Ph.D., '58; Peter Boyle, '57; and Michelle Bauer, senior Communication major and winner of the first Br. Gerry Molyneaux Scholarship.

Longtime La Salle Supporter Honored with Holroyd Award

Thomas F. Toomey Jr., M.D., '59, a life-long supporter of La Salle and active alumni leader, was posthumously honored at the 2005 Holroyd Award and Lecture in October.

His wife, Ellen Toomey, and daughter, Kimberly Toomey, '91, accepted the Holroyd Award on his behalf. Attendees also heard a lecture by the President and C.E.O. of Childrens Hospital Los Angeles, Walter W. "Bill" Noce Jr., '67.

The Holroyd Award, named after legendary La Salle biology professor Roland Holroyd, Ph.D., recognizes the distinguished contributions by a La Salle alumnus or alumna to the medical profession.

Toomey retired in 2001 as Medical Director and Senior Vice President of Professional Affairs at Mercy Catholic Medical Center. Previously, he headed the gynecology and obstetrics department at the center. In the 1970s and '80s, he helped establish and operate a free clinic for women at Mercy Hospital. Toomey also maintained a practice at Mercy Fitzgerald for 17 years and was a clinical professor at Thomas Jefferson University for 12 years. In addition, he had volunteered as a consultant and women's health care provider for Community Volunteers in Medicine in West Chester, Pa.

Always a supporter of the University, in recent years Toomey had become an active volunteer leader at La Salle. He made significant contributions as a member of the Alumni Association Board of Directors from 2003 to 2005. He also served on the Health Professionals Alumni Association leadership and Holroyd Award selection committee and was president of the organization at one time. He passed away in 2005.

A highly regarded executive, Noce has served the state, regional, and national health-care industry, and he is a frequent contributor to all levels of discussions on public policy issues specific to access to quality health care for children. He was the recipient of the Walker-Sullivan Fellowship Award to study international health care issues in England and Sweden.

Thomas Keagy, Dean of Arts and Sciences, presents the Holroyd Award to Ellen Toomey, who received it on behalf of her late husband, Thomas F. Toomey Jr., M.D., '59.

Walter W. "Bill" Noce Jr., '67, President and C.E.O. of Childrens Hospital Los Angeles, gives the Holroyd Lecture.

IT Leadership Award Bestowed

William H. Morgan, C.I.O. and Executive Vice President of the Philadelphia Stock Exchange, who spearheaded efforts to make it the first floor-based exchange to trade all of its options and indexes electronically, received La Salle University's IT Leadership Award for his contributions to the field of Information Technology.

"Seven years ago, we began totally revamping our options systems, adding innovations that allowed us to change the way we do business," Morgan said. "These changes position us to better compete as an electronic exchange."

These innovations included creating the PHLX XL Options Trading Systems, which made electronic options and indices trading possible for floor-based exchanges.

Morgan was asked to serve on a

La Salle advisory board that helped guide the development of La Salle's graduate program in Information Technology, and he continues to serve on the program's standing advisory board.

He graduated maxima cum laude from Peirce College with a degree in computer science. "While I didn't go to La Salle, several family members and close business associates went there, so it's a special place to me," Morgan said.

"Bill richly deserves the 2005 IT Leadership award because of his significant contributions to the field, especially in championing the use of innovative technology at the Philadelphia Stock Exchange," said Margaret McManus, Ph.D., Associate Dean for the School of Arts and Sciences at La Salle, who created the advisory panel for the University's graduate computer science programs.

Recent Grants Received

La Salle University has recently received the following grants:

- A $295,000 contract that the City of Philadelphia, Mayor's Office of Community Services, and the Philadelphia Empowerment Zone have awarded to La Salle University's Nonprofit Center to administer the West Philadelphia Empowerment Zone Organizational Effectiveness Grants and Arts and Cultural Enhancement.
- A $255,400 contract that the City of Philadelphia's Department of Public Health has awarded to the La Salle Neighborhood Nursing Center for the 2005-06 Title V Infant and Child Home Visiting/Health Intervention.
- $124,821 from the Pennsylvania Higher Education Assistance Agency for scholarships for independent adult students enrolled full- or part-time in a wide variety of undergraduate and graduate programs.
- $50,000 from the Wachovia Foundation for scholarship assistance for African American and Latino students.

Record Attendance at Family Weekend

The 2005 Family Weekend, held the first weekend of October, had a record attendance this year of nearly 350 families, who came to campus to attend a variety of new and traditional events.

Hosted by La Salle's Parents' Association, the weekend featured a Saturday family dinner in the Union Ballroom following the football team's overtime defeat of Iona College. Over 250 people enjoyed an Italian buffet, dancing, prizes, and a caricaturist. A harvest dinner also was held on Friday evening to give families an opportunity to enjoy La Salle's newest dining facility, Treetops Café.

Other well-attended weekend events included a Sunday morning brunch with La Salle's President Brother Michael J. McGinniss, F.S.C., Ph.D., '70, and a Saturday pre-game barbeque.

FIELD HOCKEY WINNERS CELEBRATE 25TH ANNIVERSARY

Members of La Salle's 1980 NCAA National Champion Field Hockey team reunited for a dinner on October 22 to celebrate the 25th anniversary of their championship. The team will receive commemorative championship rings at halftime of the La Salle basketball game on January 29. In the Fall 2005 issue of La Salle Magazine, new University Trustee Joseph A. Frick was erroneously identified as a La Salle graduate. He graduated from the University of Notre Dame in 1974.

Oktoberfest Draws a Crowd

Close to 750 alumni, students, and friends attended Homecoming on October 29, participating in the annual Oktoberfest celebration.

The German-themed event under the alumni tent featured traditional Oktoberfest food such as potato pancakes, sauerkraut, and knockwurst, Oktoberfest lager, and lots of giveaways. Children enjoyed a jumbo slide, candy, and clowns, while adults talked with old friends and listened to a Tyrolean-style accordionist.

La Salle's football team capped the event with an exciting last-minute win over the Kean University Cougars. A 31-yard field goal with only five seconds left, gave the Explorers a 38-36 victory. Many senior students, attending their first official alumni event, along with a large number of young alumni, were at the fest.

GOOD SPORTS Faculty Lend Expertise to La Salle Athletes

BY SANDY SMITH

Sid MacLeod, Associate Professor of Communication, can still recall vividly the day he became part of La Salle's Athletic support team.

"Many years ago, I was approached by Paul Westhead, who was the coach of the basketball team. He had some quality players whom he felt the media would be approaching after the game, and he asked me if there was anything I could do to help."

With help from the News Bureau, MacLeod produced a how-not-to-talk-to-the-press video. The result was a ridiculous film that nonetheless drove the point home: It's important for players to think before they speak to reporters.

Since then, MacLeod has been a valued member of the La Salle faculty who help the Athletic Department stay on top of its game. These faculty members work with coaches, Athletic Department staff, and the student-athletes themselves on many aspects of the La Salle experience, from recruiting top talent to encouraging postgraduate education. Faculty members also help the department with professional development programs, including strategic planning, media relations, and time management.

"One thing that some athletic departments can lose sight of is the fact that they are part of an institution as a whole. This is not the case at La Salle," said La Salle Director of Athletics Thomas Brennan, Ed.D.

La Salle faculty support is equally crucial to student-athlete success off the field. For many La Salle students, athletics is the passport to a future of scholarship. Associate Professor of Biology Annette O'Connor, Ph.D., La Salle's NCAA faculty Athletics representative, gets her greatest satisfaction from seeing such students flourish.

"The thing I enjoy most about my position is working with the student-athletes," said O'Connor, who is responsible for monitoring student-athlete eligibility and progress towards degree completion. "The student-athletes that I have had the most rewarding experience with are those who have won postgraduate scholarships—students who came here not well-prepared for college, but who went on to do extremely well."

Faculty members, such as Tim Erb of La Salle's Counseling Center, work with athletic department coaches, staff, and student-athletes with workshops and as guest speakers at monthly meetings.

La Salle also has a unique source of support for its coaches and athletes: a doctoral program in Sports Psychology, headed by Frank Gardner, Ph.D. Psychology faculty have aided coaches and players with decision making and team cohesion, on and off the field.

Professor of Management Greg Bruce, former Dean of the School of Business, served on the committee that studied La Salle's Athletic program in conjunction with the NCAA certification program. The committee found a program that was well-administered and concerned about the welfare of its students.

School of Business faculty have also played an important role in Athletic Department staff development. Many of these faculty members have offered valuable assistance to coaches and administrators, honing their interviewing skills and helping enhance team-building and leadership skills.

Why do La Salle faculty get so involved with the athletic program? According to Professor of Education Preston Feden, Ed.D., it's because playing team sports is itself a learning experience. "Teachers are also coaches, and coaches are teachers, and there's not a lot of difference between the two," he said.

Feden's workshops with coaches have helped them instill in players an understanding of good sportsmanship. "When the coaches are working on the field, the players are learning. And what they're learning are valuable life lessons."

"With these vital contributions from our faculty, the La Salle Athletic Department has become a stronger, more cohesive unit," Brennan said. "We appreciate every ounce of effort and time that our faculty give us and realize that by working together, we make the experience better for our student-athletes."

A Primer on U.S. Housing Markets and Housing Policy

By Richard K. Green and Stephen Malpezzi, '74

Urban Institute Press, 2003; 226 pp.; $26.50

A Primer on U.S. Housing Markets and Housing Policy is the first book that rigorously explains the economics of housing policy for a general audience. Planners, government officials, and public policy students will find that the economic perspective is a very powerful and useful way to examine these issues. The authors provide a broad review of the market for housing services in the U.S., including a conceptual framework, an overview of housing demand and supply, methods for measuring prices and quantities, and sources of basic data on markets. They cover housing programs and policies and offer answers to policy questions that are of current interest.

Stephen Malpezzi, '74, graduated from La Salle University with a bachelor's degree in political science and went on to earn a master's degree in international affairs and a Ph.D. in economics from George Washington University. He is now Professor, Wangard Faculty Scholar, and Chair of the University of Wisconsin-Madison's Department of Real Estate and Urban Land Economics. Prior to joining the University of Wisconsin, Malpezzi was an economist specializing in urban development at the World Bank from 1981 to 1990.

When You're Asked to Do the Impossible: Principles of Business Teamwork and Leadership from the U.S. Army's Elite Rangers

By Anthony Le Storti, '67

The Lyons Press, 2003; 320 pp.; $19.95

When You're Asked to Do the Impossible sets out the leadership principles and operational methods of the U.S. Army's elite Rangers for civilian teams and organizations that must also operate under extremely difficult and demanding circumstances in response to crucial challenges. This book provides guidance for the development of individuals, teams, and leaders. Exploring such areas as creativity, interpersonal dynamics, and personal courage, it pays special attention to decision making and planning in the face of uncertainty and to the need for constant, integrated learning.

Anthony J. Le Storti, '67, earned his bachelor's degree in political science and received a Regular Army commission from La Salle's ROTC program. He began his professional life as a U.S. Army Airborne Ranger and was decorated for his service in Vietnam. This book synthesizes his experience and research in his careers as a Ranger, college professor, and management consultant.

Le Storti is a founding partner of IDEATECTS, a management consultant firm located in Doylestown, Pa., that specializes in creativity and leadership development. He has presented at more than 75 major conferences and recently returned from South Africa where, among other assignments, he consulted to that country's top law enforcement agency, the Directorate of Special Operations. He resides in Doylestown with his wife, Lorraine.

Raised Italian-American: Stories, Values & Traditions from the Italian Neighborhood

By Joseph J. Bonocore, '69

iUniverse Inc., 2005; 244 pp., $19.95

Raised Italian-American: Stories, Values & Traditions from the Italian Neighborhood recalls Bonocore's childhood in an Italian neighborhood in South Philadelphia and explains the traditions and superstitions that Italian families used to bind themselves together in good times and in bad times, including the Christmas Eve Feast of the Seven Fishes, the Nativity Scene, the LeBefana, naming newborn children, making homemade wine, the Italian formal wedding, the Italian funeral, the tradition of street painting and window dressing, and many more. Bonocore also focuses on eight key Italian-American values, such as love of God, love of family, love of country, entrepreneurship, and maintaining the Italian heritage.

Joseph J. Bonocore, '69, and his wife, Phyllis, were both born and raised in South Philadelphia. Joseph Bonocore earned his bachelor's degree in marketing from La Salle and has held senior management positions in the technology sector for more than 30 years. He is currently the President and Chief Executive Officer of Impresa Technologies Inc. He is a member of a number of Italian-American organizations, including the National Italian-American Foundation, IL Cenacolo, and the Silicon Valley Italian Executive Council. In addition to Raised Italian-American, Bonocore is the author of Commanding Communications: Navigating Emerging Trends in Telecommunications, which was published in 2001. He and Phyllis have three grown children, Joseph, Kristen, and Michael, and live in Corte Madera, Calif.

Young Director Takes His First Film Festival Prize

If his auspicious start is a sign of things to come, Neal Tyler, '04, may one day join the ranks of such directors as Scorsese, Coppola, or Tarantino.

Tyler won Best Director in the Student Film category of the Ocean City (N.J.) Film Festival, held June 10. While a senior in the Communication Department at La Salle, he wrote and directed his winning entry, Face to Face.

His film focuses on a conversation at a diner between two men named Alex and Sam (played by Tyler's La Salle classmates Todd Henderson and Shawn Nies). As the film unfolds, Sam intends to murder Alex. The narrative fades in and out of time frames and flashbacks to illustrate the events leading up to the momentous meeting.

"It's about life and death," Tyler said of his 18-minute film. "I was inspired by a dream I had. I changed some of the details, but the idea stayed the same. It's basically about confronting the past and getting ready for your fate."

The director worked with friends and colleagues on the film. He enjoyed the close-knit feel of the shoot; Tyler said he wanted to use the input of everyone involved to produce the best possible results. "When I'm on set, I like it to be open among everybody," he explained. "I fed off ideas the actors had. Actually, one of my favorite shots in the entire film was Todd's idea."

The Atco, N.J., resident was shocked when he learned he had won the competition. Then, the festival organizers invited Tyler to participate in a question-and-answer session. "It was a great feeling. It's a whole reversal being put in front of the stage for a change," he said.

Tyler's favorite director is Martin Scorsese. He is influenced not so much by the legendary filmmaker's signature style, but by his distinctive approach to telling a story. "Every moment has something interesting visually, or something interesting being said," said Tyler, who majored in Film and Mass Media at La Salle. "They are full of themes and elements. Every time you watch, you gather something new." Tyler's other major influences include directors Wes Anderson and Alfred Hitchcock.

Recently, Tyler has worked as a production assistant on several independent films in the Philadelphia area. He is also producing and co-editing two, The Space Between and The Chest. Tyler hopes to get both films into various film festivals, and he also plans on premiering the films at various venues throughout the city. He is also currently in the pre-production stage of a documentary focusing on food vendors at Citizens Bank Park, which he is helming with fellow La Salle alum Pat Campbell.

1976 ★ REUNION YEAR Ellwood J. Anaheim (B.A.) of Cheverly, Md., has been on the faculty of the Rome School of Music at The Catholic University of America in Washington, D.C., for almost 20 years. He was co-director of the university's popular Music Theatre Program and is the founder and director of the Musical Theater Research Project, developed to heighten research in the performing arts through public performances of landmark musical comedies and operettas from America's past. He gave a lecture entitled "Shaw's Folly: Straus' Fortune," before performances of The Chocolate Soldier, as part of the presentation of the Oscar Straus operetta by the Musical Theater Research Project at The Catholic University of America.

Gerald T. Hathaway, Esq. (B.A.) of Millburn, N.J., is the President of the Board of Trustees of the Barrow Group, which was nominated for 2005 Drama Desk Award for Outstanding Play, for its production of Pentecost. He acts as counsel to the New York Shakespeare Festival, which produced Two Gentlemen of Verona, in Central Park. While a student at La Salle in 1975, he managed the University's Masque production of the play.

George MacConnell, Esq. (B.A., M.B.A. '80) of Winter Haven, Fla., has been married to his wife for 26 years and has two children. He works in Miami as a C.P.A. and J.D. in the health-care industry.

Thomas A. Zelante, Esq. (B.A.) of Morris Township, N.J., was appointed Chairman of the Board of Trustees of The Ramapo College of New Jersey.

1978 James Firmani (B.S.) of Ashburn, Va., is following politics in and around Washington, D.C. He gave up pole-vaulting for a loftier sport. He now flies a twin engine plane for fun. He volunteers for his son's Boy Scout troop and helps the local airport survive as the volunteer representative for the Aircraft Owners Pilot Association. His biggest thrill is being a dad.

Robert A. Kennedy Jr. (B.S.) of Moorestown, N.J., sits on the boards of Cornerstone Bank, Our Lady of Lourdes Medical Center, St. Joseph's Carpenter Society, and Cooper River Rowing Association.

William A. Smith (B.S.) of Cinnaminson, N.J., is the Senior Vice President and Regional Manager of Community Investments at Citizens Bank of Pennsylvania. One of the hats he wears in this position is that of a compliance officer of the Community Reinvestment Act for Citizens. He is using his banker's skills to help rebuild parts of his hometown of Philadelphia, Pa.

IN MEMORIAM:

John S. Penny, Ph.D., '37

John S. Penny, Ph.D., '37, a Professor and Chair of the Biology Department at La Salle University who guided dozens of future doctors through La Salle's pre-med program, died Nov. 7, 2005, of Alzheimer's disease. He was 91.

After graduating from La Salle, Penny earned his graduate degrees in botany from the University of Pennsylvania. After obtaining his doctorate, he joined the U.S. Army, where he served in its Air Force.

From 1947 to 1950, he worked in Venezuela for the Creole Petroleum Corp. Later in 1950, he joined the La Salle faculty.

"He was caring to students, helping them to excel beyond their own expectations," said John Daly, M.D., '69, a member of La Salle's Board of Trustees and Dean of the School of Medicine at Temple University. "Under John Penny, the pre-med program was rigorous. When he finished with you, if you were successful in the program, you were virtually assured a place in medical school."

John T. Magee, M.D., '53, was among the first students taught by Penny. "Both the clarity of his thought and the precision of his speech stayed with me and my classmates for a long time," said Magee, now retired. "From the first grade to four years of medical school, he was the most influential teacher I had. He was the closest thing I had to an intellectual godfather."

A Philadelphia native, Penny planted a number of trees on the La Salle campus, including a group of specially grafted weeping Japanese Cherry Trees to celebrate the opening of a new science center in 1960. The University dedicated a plaque to him in 1979 near what is now Holroyd Hall.

Penny is survived by his wife of 59 years, Winifred Gowen Penny; daughters Jane, '74, and Rosemary, '85; sons Stephen, '80, John, '72, and Philip, '77; and seven grandchildren.
